DICTIONARY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Vol. 2.

LAB

L A liquid consonant, which preserves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated, as, hlaf; loaf; hlafeg, lady.

At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, shall, still, full;
except after a diphthong; as, fail, feel, real, cool. In a word of more syllables it is written single; as, channel, canal, tendril. It is sometimes put before e, and sounded feebly after it; as, bible, title.

LA interject. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo; unless it be the French la.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you speak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

LA'BDANUM. n. f. [Latin.] A resin, of a strong not unpleasant smell, and an aromatick, but not agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub in Crete. Hill.

To LA'BEFY. v. a. [labefacio, Lat.] To weaken; to impair. Diet.

LA'BEL. n. f. [labellum, Latin.]

1. A small slip or scrap of writing.

When wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.
On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impress'd from the papal seal.
Ascham's Pasternon.

3. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall stay them both. Shakspeare.

LA'BENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding;
gliding; slipping. Diet.

LA'BIAL. adj. [labialis, Lat.] Uttered by the lips.

VOL. II.

LAB

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.
Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial. Holder.

LA'BIATED. adj. [labium, Lat.] Formed with lips.

LA'BIODENTAL. adj. [labium and dentalis.] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

The dental consonants are very easy; and first the labiodentals, f; v; also the linguodentals, t, h, d, h. Holder.

LABO'RANT. n. f. [laborans, Lat.] A chymist. Not in use.

I can show you a sort of fixt sulphur, made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LABO'RATORY. n. f. [laboratoire, French.]
A chymist's workroom.

It would contribute to the history of colours, if chymists would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle.

The flames of love will perform those miracles they of the turnace boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Decay of Piety.

LABO'RIOUS. adj. [laboricux, French;
laboriosus, Lat.]

1. Intelligent in work; assiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unpotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and, lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. South.

A spacious cave within its furthest part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden.

To his laborious youth confin'd in war,
And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace.
Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy.

Do it thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all: learn them from Cato. Add.

LABO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.]
With labour; with toil.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Dec. of Piety.

I chide laboriously to hear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABO'RIOUSNESS. n. f. [from laborious.]
1. Toilsomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gain's effects, as well as the laboriousness of the work; those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the infatuate miser. Decay of Piety.

LAB

2. Diligence; assiduity.

LA'BOUR. n. f. [labour, Fr. labor, Lat.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail;
work.

If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shakspeare.
I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Thos.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat. Shakspeare.

3. Work done; performance.

4. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Hornor.

5. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of women's labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly does enlarge,
Incline thy will to assist our wishful vow. Spenser.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain;
My throws come thicker, and my cries increase'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse sup-press'd. Dryden.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour.
Gregory.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs 'till it be delivered. South's Sermon.

To LA'BOUR. v. n. [laboro, Latin.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When shall I come to the top of that same hill?

—You do climb up it now; look how we labour.
Shakspeare.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd.
More than mine own. Shakspeare.

Who is it with him?

—None but the fool, who labours to out-jest
His heart-struck injuries. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

Let none work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Exod.

He is so touch'd with the memory of his pains

valence and protection, that his soul labours for an expression to represent it. Notes on the Odyssey.

Euphrates salutes you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that we may stand perfect. Coley.

2. 'To do work; to take pains.

The matter of the ceremonies had wrought, for the most part, only upon light-headed, weak men, whose satisfaction was not to be laboured for.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness, shall not be rich.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of.

3. 'To move with difficulty.

The fowle that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning full,
Is love.

4. 'To be diseased with. [morbo laborare, Latin.] Not in use.

They abound with horse,
On which one want our camp doth only labour.

I was called to another, who in childhood laboured of an ulcer in her left hip.

5. 'To be in distress; to be pressed.

To this interval like the fury flies,
Here hides her hated head, and fires the lab'ring flies.

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne.

As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon. Dryd.
Thus exercise will call down the favour of Heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you. Wilde's Preparation for Death.

6. 'To be in childbirth; to be in travail.

There lay a log unlighted on the earth,
When she was labouring in the throws of birth;
For th' unborn child the fatal sisters came,
And said 'd it up, and tof'd it on the flame. Dryd.
Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And fecund to labour with th' inspiring god.

To LA'BOUR. v. a.

1. 'To work at; to move with difficulty; to forin with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgment.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand,
Th' artificer and art you might command,

To labour arms for Troy. Dryden's Encid.

An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information.

To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryd.

LA'BOURER. n. f. [laboureur, French.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot.

The sun but seem'd the lab'rer of the year,
Each waving moon supply'd her wat'ry store,

To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brimful vessels to the Belgian shore. Dryd.

Labourers and idle persons, children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers dots.

Not balmy sleep to lab'ers faint with pain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,

Are hilt so charming, as thy fight to me. Pope.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,
Health to husband, and to his infants bread.

The lab'rer bears.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

LAC

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness.

The fowle that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning full.

Is love.

LA'BOUR-SOME. adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence. Not in use.

Forget
Your lab'rsome and dainty trim, wherein
You made great Jove angry.

He hath, my lord, by lab'rsome petition,
Wrong from me my flow leave.

LA'BRA. n. f. [Spanish.] A lip. Not used.

Word of denial in thy lab'ras here;
Word of denial, from my lip thou liest.

LA'BYRINTH. n. f. [labyrinthus, Latin.] A maze; a place formed with inextricable windings.

Sufoik, stay;
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;

There minotaurs and ugly treasous lurk.

Words, which would tear
The tender labyrinth of a maid's soft ear.

My clamours tear
The ear's soft labyrinth, and cleft the air.

The ear of Essex had not proceeded with his accustomed wamings and skill; but run into labyrinths, from whence he could not disentangle himself.

My soul is on her journey; do not now
Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself
I th' maze and winding labyrinths o' th' world.

LAC. n. f.

Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable, and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree.

1. The stick lac. 2. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom.

LACE. n. f. [lucet, French; laqueus, Lat.]

1. A string; a cord.

There the fond ty entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free thereout; but all in vain;

For striving more, the more in laces strong Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twain
In limy snares, the subtil loops among.

2. A snare; a gin.

The king had injured been in love's strong lace.

3. A plaited string, with which women fasten their clothes.

O! cut my lace, lest, my heart cracking, it Break too.

Doll ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.

Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces; and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.

He wears a stuff, whose thread is coarse and round,

But trimm'd with curious lace.

6. Sugar. A cant word, now out of use.

It haply he the feet pursues,
That read and comment upon news;

He takes up their mysterious face,
He drinks his coffee without lace.

To LACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a string run through eyelet holes.

I caus'd a fomentation to be made, and put on a leech suck, by which the weak parts were strengthened.

At this, for new replies he did not stay,
But lac'd his crested helm, and strode away.

These glittering spoils, now made the victor's gain,
He to his body suits, but suits in vain;

LAC

Messapus' helm he finds among the rest,
And laces on, and wears the waving crest.

Lake Mrs. Primly's great belly; the may lace it down before, but it burrishes on her hips.

When Jenny's stays are newly lac'd,
Fair Alma plays about her waist.

2. 'To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.

It is but a night-gown in respect of yours;
cloth of gold and coats, and lac'd with silver.

3. To embellish with variegations.

Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder East;

Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountain tops.

Then clap your sleeves of plaster on't,
That lac'd with bits of ruffie, makes a front.

4. 'To beat; whether from the form which

L'F strange ules, or by corruption of lach.

Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll face your coat for ye.

LACED MUTTON. An old word for a whore.

Ay, Sir, I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her a lac'd mutton, and she gave me nothing for my labour.

LA'CEMAN. n. f. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.

I met with a nonjuror, engaged with a laceman, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Cæsar, or Nero.

LA'CERABLE. adj. [from lacerate.] Such as may be torn.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable composition.

To LACERATE. v. n. [lacro, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.

And my fons lac rate and rip up, viper-like, the womb that brought them forth.

The heat breaks through the water, so as to lacerate and lit up great bubbles too heavy for the air to buoy up, and causeth boiling.

Here lacerated friendship claims a tear.

LA'CERATION. n. f. [from lacerate.] The act of tearing or rending; the breach made by tearing.

To LACKER, v. a. [from the noun.] To smear over with laker.

What shook the figure, and made the people stare?

Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair. Pope

LACKEY, n. f. [lucquis, Fr.] An attending servant; a footboy.

They would shame to make me

Wait else at door: a fellow counsellor,

'Mong boys, and grooms, and lackeys! Shaksp.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,

He's cautious to avoid the coach and six,

And on the lackeys will no quarrel fix. Dryden

Lacqueys were never so saucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days. Addison's Spectator

To LACKEY, v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely. I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.

This common body,

Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,

Goes to, and back, lacquering the varying tide,

To rot itself with motion. Shakespeare

So dear to heav'n is faintly chastity,

That when a soul is found sincerely so,

A thousand liveried angels lackey her,

Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt. Milton

To LACKEY, v. n. To act as a footboy; to pay servile attendance.

Off have I servants teen on horses ride,

The free and noble lacquetry by their side. Sandys

Our Italian translator of the Æneis is a foot poet, he lackeys by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryden

LADDER, n. f. [hladne, Saxon.]

1. A frame made with steps placed between two upright pieces.

Whose compass is rotten, and carried in time, And spread as it should be, thit's ladder way Temple

Now streets grow throug'd, and busy as by day, Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quene,

Some cut the pipe, and thine the engine's play, And some more bold mount ladder to the tree Dryden

Easy in words thy style, in sense sublime, 'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream,

Its foot on earth, its height above the skies. Prior

I saw a stage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants, with two or three ladders to mount it. Gulliver's Travels

2. Any thing by which one climbs.

Then took the help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a hasty ambition; and such a one, who wanting true sufficiency to raise him, would make a ladder of any mischief. Sedney

I must climb her window, Shakespeare

The ladder made of cords, Shakespeare

Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne! Shaksp.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder, Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shaksp.

3. A gradual rise.

Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach. Swift

LADE, n. f.

Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon laðe, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the waters into the sea, or into some greater river.

Cibson's Camden

To LADE, v. a. preter. laded; part. passive, laded or laden. [from hluben, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.

1. To load; to freight; to burden.

And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence. Genesis

The experiment which sheweth the weights of several bodies in comparison with water, is of use in lading of ships, and shewing what burden they will bear. Bacon

The vessels, heavy laden, put to sea

With prosperous wind, a woman leads the way. Dryden

Though the peripatetic doctrine does not satisfy, yet it is as easy to account for the difficulties he charges on it, as for those his own hypothesis is laden with. Locke

2. [hluban, to draw, Saxon.] To heave out; to throw out.

He chides the sea that swallows him from them, Saying, he'll lade it dry to have his way. Shaksp.

They never let blood; but say, if the pot boils too full, there is no need of lading out any of the water, but only of taking away the fire; and so they allow all heats of the blood by abstinance, and cooling herbs. Temple

If there be springs in the state marl, there must be help to lade or pump it out. Mortimer

LA'DING, n. f. [from lade.] Weight; burden.

O time with night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps?

With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the miled and lonely traveller? Milton.
In lamp tumblers I use spirit of wine instead of oil, and the same flame has melted isolated gold.
Boyle.

2. Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.

Thy gentle eyes send forth a quick'ning spirit
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rouse.
Cynthia, fair regent of the night,
O may thy silver lamp from heaven's high bow'r,
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gay.

LAMPASS. n. f. [lampas, Fr.] A lump of flesh, about the bigness of a nut, in the lampona, a drunken song. It imports, let us drink, from the old French lamper, and was repeated at the end of each couplet at carousals. Trev.] A personal satire; abuse; censure written not to reform but to vex.

They say my talent is satire; if so, it is a fruitful age: they have torn the dragon's teeth themselves, and it is but just they should reap each other's lampona. Dryden.

Make satire a lampon. Pope.

TO LAMPOON. v. a. [from the noun.] To abuse with personal satire.

LAMPOONER. n. f. [from lampon.] A scribbler of personal satire.

We are naturally displeased with an unknown critick, as the ladies are with a lamponer, because we are bitten in the dark. Dryden.

The lamps are those who are called libellers, lamponers, and pamphleteers. Tatler.

LAMPREY. n. f. [lamproye, Fr. lamprey,
Dutch.]

Many fish much like the eel frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as, the lampreil, lamproye, and lampreie. Walton.

LAMPREY. n. f. A kind of sea fish.

These rocks are frequented by lamprons, and greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned. Broome on the Odyssey.

LANCE. n. f. [lance, Fr. lancea, Lat.] seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback.

Spear; javelin.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give

LAN

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice butteth breaks;
And in it rages, a pugnacious straw doth pierce it.
Shakespeare.

They shall hold the bow and the lance, Jeremiah.
He clor beholds his javelin tall in vain,
Nor other lance, nor other hope remain;
He calls Diophobus, demands a spear
In vain, for no Diophobus was there. Pope.

To LANCE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pierce; to cut.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lance'd my arm. Shaksp.

Her back, and piercing through her inmost heart,
Drew backward. Dryden.

2. To open surgically; to cut in order to a cure.

We do lance Diseases in our bodies. Shakespeare.

Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle a sore
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore. Shak.
That differs as far from our usual laceration, as the lancings of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary. Deacy of Fictio.

Lance the fore,
And cut the head; for till the core is found
The secret vice is fed. Dryden.

The shepherd stands,
And when the lancing knife requires his hands,
Vain help, with idle prayers, from heav'n demands.
Dryden.

LA'NCOLV. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.

a lanceable blow. Sidney.

LANCER'S AIDE. n. f. [lance speciatte, Fr.]
The officer under the corporal: not now in use among us.

To th' Indies of her arm he flies,
Fought both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain essay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancepursuivante
With Spanish pike, he broach'd a pore.
Cleaveland.

LA'NCET. n. f. [lancette, Fr.] A small pointed, chirurgial instrument.

I gave vent to it by an aperture with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Weyman's Surgery.
A vein, in an apparent blue, runneth along the body, and if dexterously prick'd with a lancet, squoth a red drop. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Hippocrates saith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancets or scythes, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by flapping or perturbation, as in horses. Arbutnot.

To LANCHE, v. a. [lancer, Fr.] This word is too often written launch: it is only a vocal corruption of lance.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whose arm can lance the fiercer bolt,
And who's the better Jove. Dryden and Lee.
Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore,
When Jove tremendous in the fable deeps,
Lanc'd his red lightning at our tattered'd ships.
Pope.

LANCINATION. n. f. [from lancino, Lat.]
Tearing; laceration.

To LANCINATE. v. a. [lancino, Lat.] To tear; to rend; to lacerate.

LAND. n. f. [lanb, Gothic, Saxon, and so all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. A country; a region distinct from other countries.

The nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-bred people. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Duckingham. Shakespeare.

LAN

What had he done to make him by the land?

The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotic. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Earth, distinct from water.
By land they found that huge and mighty country. Abbot.

Yet if thou go'st by land, tho' grief possels
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less.
But, ah! be warn'd to shun the wat'ry way. Dryd.
They turn their heads to sea, their terms to land.
And; rest with greedy joy th' Italian strand. Dryd.

3. It is often used in composition, as opposed to sea.

The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline did red from the land service, they had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.

He to-night hath boarded a land c'racker;
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever. Shaksp.
With eleven thousand land-pollers, and twenty-six ships of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy, and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale's Or. of Mankind.
I was not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden's Fennel.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land-carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Addison's Freeholder.

The Phœnician carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stop't not short, without pulling their trade to the Indies. Arbutnot.

The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea.
Arbutnot.

4. Ground; surface of the place. Unusual.

Beneath his sleeky casque he felt the blow,
And roll'd with limbs relax'd, along the land. Pope.

5. An estate real and immoveable.
To forfeit all your goods, lands, and tenements, Cattle, and goods whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection. Shakespeare.

He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoyed certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia. Knotches.

This man is freed from servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.

6. Nation; people; the inhabitants of the land.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryd.

7. Urine. [hlonb, Saxon.] As Probably land-dunn was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or laut is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hanmer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Shaksp. Win. Tale.

To LAND, v. a. [from the noun.] To let on shore.

The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed In Britain. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

He who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
Thy committed pledge restore,
And land him safely on the shore. Dryden.

Another Typhus shall new seas explore, Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore. Dryden.

LANERET. n. f. A little hawk

LANGUAGE. n. f. [langage, French; lingua, Latin.]

1. Human speech.

We may define language, if we consider it more materially, to be letters, forming and producing words and sentences; but if we consider it according to the design thereof, then language is apt signs for communication of thoughts. Hobbes.

2. The tongue of one nation as distinct from others.

O! good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv'd in, Shakspeare.

He not from Rome alone, but Greece,
Like Jason, brought the golden fleece;
To him that language, though to none
Of th' others, as his own was known. Denham.

3. Style; manner of expression.

Though his language should not be refin'd,
It must not be obscure and impudent. Rejcommon.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women, men, for dress:
Their praise is still—the style is excellent;
The sense, they humbly take upon content. Pope.

LANGUAGED. adj. [from the noun.]

Having various languages.

He was d'ring long a wider circle made,
And many languag'd nations has survey'd. Pope.

To LANGUIOR. r. n. [languir, French; languore, Latin.]

1. To grow feeble; to pine away; to lose strength.

Let her languish
A drop of blood a-day; and, being aged,
Die of this toly. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

We and our fathers do languish of such diseases. 2 John.

What can we expect, but that her languishings should end in death?
His sorrows bore him off; and softly laid
His languish'd limbs upon his homely bed. Dryden.

2. To be no longer vigorous in motion; not to be vivid in appearance.

The troops with hate inspir'd,
Their darts with clamour at a distance drive,
And only keep the languish'd war alive. Dryden.

3. To sink or pine under sorrow, or any slow passion.

What man who knows
What woman is, yea, what she cannot chuse
But must be, will his free hours languish out
For assur'd bondage? Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

The land shall mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein, shall languish. Hosea.

I have been talking with a sutor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure. Shakspeare.

I was about fifteen when I took the liberty to chuse for myself, and have ever since languish'd under the displeasure of an inexorable father. Spectator.

Let Leonora consider, that, at the very time in which she languishes for the loss of her lover, there are persons just perishing in a shipwreck. Spectator.

4. To look with softness or tenderness.

What poems think you soft, and to be read
With languishing regards, and bending head? Dryden.

LANGUISH. n. f. [from the verb.] Soft appearance.

By that count which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains;
Which I have wasted in long languishment,
Tha' seem'd the longer for my greater pains. Spenser.

2. Softness of mien.

Humilis it expresses, by the sloping or bending of the head; languishment, when we hang it one side. Dryden.

LANGUOR. n. f. [languor, Latin; languor, French.]

1. Faintness; wearisomeness.

Well hoped I, and fair beginnings had,
That he my captive languor should redeem. Spenser.

For these, these tribunes, in the dust I write
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears. Shakspeare.

2. Littlefiness; inattention.

Academical disputation gives vigour and briskness to the mind thus exerted, and removes the languor of private study and meditation. Watts.

3. Softness; laxity.

To sties of fragrance, lily-silver'd vales
Diffusing languor in the parting gales. Dunckel.

4. [In physics.]

Languor and lassitude signifies a faintness, which may arise from want or decay of spirits, through indigestion, or too much exercise; or from an additional weight of fluids, from a diminution of secretion by the common discharges. Quincy.

LANGUOROUS. adj. [languoreus, French.]

Tedious; melancholy. Not in use.

Dear lady, how shall I declare thy case,
Whom late I left in languorous constraint? Spenser.

To LANGUIATE. r. a. [lunio, Latin.] To tear in pieces; to lacerate.

1. Loose; not filled up; not stiffened out; not fat; not plump; slender.

The commons hat thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakspeare.

Name not Winterface, whose skin's so slack,
Lank, as an unthrill's purse. Donne.

We let down into the receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lank, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much. Boyle.

Most earth produces corn and grass, but both too rank and too luxuriant in their growth.

Let not my land be large a promise boast,
Lest the lank ears in length of time be lost. Dryden.

Now, now my bearded harvest gilds the plain.
Thus dreads the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on.
Till his lark purple declares his money gone. Dryd.

Meagre and lark with fasting grown,
And nothing left but skin and bone;
They just keep life and soul together. Swift

2. Milton seems to use this word for faint; languid.

He, pitious of her woes, rear'd her lark head,
And gave her to his daughters to inhale
In milder larks flow'd with aliphoid. Milton.

LA'NKNESS. n. f. [from lark.] Want of plumpness.

LA'NNER. n. f. [lanier, Fr. lannarius, Lat.] A species of hawk.

1. A transparent case for a candle.

God shall be my hope.

My stay, my guide, my lanthorn in my feet. Shak.
Thou art our adunial; thou bearest the lanthorn
In the pop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art
The knight of the burning lamp. Shakespeare.

A candle lasteth longer in a lanthorn than at large. Bacon.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, one hath the pre-eminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house, the noble foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom. Bacon's atlantis.

O thiefish night,
Why should'st thou thieve, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the flais
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil? Milton.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand.

Gov. of the Tongue.
Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lanthorn-maker. Mor's Divine Dialogues.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the middle of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle. Locke.

2. A light-house; a light hung-out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the lanthorn fix'd on high Shines like a moon through the brightest sky,
While by its beams the wary sailors steer. Addison.

LA'NTERN jaws. A term used of a thin visage, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth might transfix the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn jaws, he wrong his face into a hideous grimace. Sp. t.

LA'NTINOUS. adj. [lanuginosus, Latin.] Downy; covered with soft hair.

LA'P. n. f. [lappe, Saxon; luppe, German.]

2. The part of the clothes that is spread horizontally over the knees as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid lap,
And hills with flow'rs fair Flora's painted lap. Spenser.

Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumbering
All in his mother's lap.

A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet morn'ring,
About him flew by hap. Spenser.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,
And 'twixt sweet ladies with my words and looks.

She bids you
All on the wanton roses lay you down,

And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will hug the long that pleateth you. Shakespeare.

Our fluting
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The never lost wearied Antony. Shakespeare.

Heaven's almighty fire
Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours Himself into her lap in fruitful showers. Croshaw.

Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps. Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into rear,
Gauges their life from whence his own began:
Rob'd of laws, affects to rule alone,
Ambitious to reign, and restless on the throne. Dryd.

To LAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

He hath a long tail which, as he defends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs, to keep himself from falling. Grev's Museum.

About the paper, whose two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was stuff like thin pasteboard, I lapped several times a slender thread of very black silk. Newton.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flowing forest rath the fled,
In her rude harts sweet flower: themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser.

The throne of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict,
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Confronted him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me,
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb cold night. Shak.

Ever agone eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton.

Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
And smiling, broods upon the naked boy,
Her garment spreads, and laps him in the folds,

Here was the repository of all the wide contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Caligula. Swift.

To LAP. v. n. To be spread or turned over any thing.

His larum bell might loud and wide be heard,
When mute require d, but never out of tune. Spens.
The peaking curate, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes to me in the infant of our encounter. Shakspcare.

How far off he these armies?
— Within a mile and half.
— Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours. Shakspcare.

She is become formidable to all her neighbours, as she puts every one to stand upon his guard, and have a continual larum bell in his ears. Howell.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three inches big, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour. Wilkins.

I see men as lusty and strong that eat but two meals a day, as others, that have let their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five. Leeke.

The young Aeneas, all at once let down,
Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town. Pope.

LASCIVIOUS. adj. [lascivus, Latin.] Lewd; lustful.

In what habit will you go along?
— Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men. Shaksp.

Began to cast lascivious eyes; she him
As wantonly repaid, in that they burn. Milton.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unmanly difficulties which, over their cups, they have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deny his money, the lascivious man to throw off his lead amours, and all their giant-like objections against christianity shall presently vanish. South.

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.

Grim us'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkl'd front;
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute. Shakspcare.

LASCIVIOUSLY. adv. [from lascivious.]

Lewdly; wantonly; loosely.

Now was the time for vig'rous lads to show
What love or honour could invite them to;
A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd. Wal.

A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, downright, plain-dealing lass it was. LeStrange.

They sometimes an hasty-kiss Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn, and neck reclu'd relent. Philips.

LASSITUDE. n. f. [lassitudo, Latin; lassitude, French.]

1. Weariness; fatigue; the pain arising from hard labour.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolition. Bacon.

Affiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper. Glan.

She lives and breeds in air; the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More's Anecdote against Atheism.

Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby be tempted to nausate, and grow tired. Watts.

From mouth and nose the briny torrent ran,
And lost in lassitude lay all the man. Pope's Odyssey.

2. [In physics.]

Lassitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distemper'd state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest; it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice whereby the fibres are not supplied. Quincy.

LASSLORN. n. f. [lass and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistress. Not used.

Brown groves,
Whole shadow the dissuaid batchelor loves,

2. Of long continuance; perpetual.

White parents may have black children, as negroes sometimes have lasting white ones. Boyle on Colours.
The grateful work is done,

The seeds of discord sow'd, the war begun:
Frolics, fears, and fury, have possess'd the state,
And fix'd the cast of a lasting hate. Dryd. Æneid.

A new cracked seldom recovers its former strength, and the memory of it leaves a lasting caution in the mind, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.

LASTINGLY. adv. [from lasting.] Perpetually; durably.

LASTINGNESS. n. f. [from lasting.] Dura-bleness; continuance.

And folds the sails; a fourth with labour laves
Th' intruding seas, and waves ejet on waves. Dryden.

To LAVE. v. n. To wash himself; to bathe.
In her chaste current oft the goddess laves,
And with celestial tears augments the waves. Pope.
To LAVER. v. n. To change the direction often in a course.

How easy 'tis when destiny proves kind,
With full spread sails to run before the wind:
But those that 'gainst stiff gales lareering go,
Must be at once resolv'd, and skilful too. Dryden.
LA'VENDER. n. f. [lavendula, Latin.] A plant.

It is one of the verticillate plants, whose flower consists of one leaf, divided into two lips; the upper lip, standing upright, is roundish, and, for the most part, broad; but the under lip is cut into three segments, which are almost equal: these flowers are disposed in whorls, and are collected into a slender spike upon the top of the stalks. Miller.

The whole lavender plant has a highly aroma-tick smell and taste, and is famous as a cephalick, nervous, and uterine medicine. Hill.

And then again he turneth to his play,
To spoil the pleasures of that paradise:
The wholesome sage, and lavender still grey,
Rank smelling rue, and cummin good for eyes. Spenser.

LA'VER. n. f. [lavoir, French; from lave.]
A washing vessel.

Let us go find the body where it lies Soak'd in his enemies' blood, and from the stream
With lavers pure, and cleansing herbs, wash out
The clouded guilt. Milton's Agonistes.

He gave her to his daughters, to imbath
In nectar'd lavers brew'd with asphodel. Milton.
Young Arius from forth his bridal bow'r Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour. Pope's Daphny.

To LAUGH. v. n. [lahan, Saxon; lachen, German and Dutch; lach, Scottish.]

1. To make that noise which sudden merriment excites.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.
There's one that laugh in's sleep, and grieves Another. Shakspeare.

They walk'd each other. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

At this faulty stuff
The large Achilles, on his prest bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakspeare.

Laughing causeth a continued expulsion of the breath with the loud noise, which maketh the interjection of laughing, shaking of the breast and sides, running of the eyes with water, if it be violent. Bacon's Natural Hist.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.

Entreat her not the world, in that I pray
You use her well; the world may laugh again,
And I may live to do you kindness, if You do it her. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets
crown'd.
The plenteous board, high-heap'd with cates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine. Pope.

L A V

3. To LAVON. v. a. To treat with contempt; to ridicule.

Presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in thee at others lives may laugh. Shakspeare.

'Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council; you'll be laughed at. Shakspeare.
The dissolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find that they are merry at their own expence. Addison.

No wit to flatter left of all his store;
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.
To LAUGH. v. a. To deride; to scorn.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
A wicked fool shall make him to be laughed to scorn of his enemies. Eccelesiasticus.

LAUGH. n. f. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

Me gentle Della beckons from the plain,
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

LAUGHABLE. adj. [from laugh.] Such as may properly excite laughter.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peep through their eye,
And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper;
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable. Shakspeare.

Caliban confesses Perilus was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer. Dryden.

LA'UGHER. n. f. [from laugh.] A man fond of merriment.

I am a common laugher. Shakspeare.
Some sober men cannot be of the general opinion,
but the laughers are much the majority. Pope.

LAUGHINGLY. adv. [from laughing.] In a merry way; merrily.

LAUGHINGSTOCK. n. f. [laugh and stock.]
A butt; an object of ridicule.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen
The laughing-stock of fortune's mockery. Spenser.
Pray you, let us not be laughing-stocks to other men's humours. Shakspeare.

Supine credulous frailty exposes a man to be both a prey and laughing-stock at once. LeStrange.

LAUGHTER. n. f. [from laugh.] Convul-sive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

To be worth,
The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in expectation; lives not in fear.
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter. Shakspeare.

The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary, or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves. Brown.

We find not that the laughter-loving dame Mourn'd for Anchises. Walter.
Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.

LA'VISH. adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology.
It may be plausibly derived from lave, to throw out; as profundere aper, is to be lavish.]

1. Prodigious; wasteful; indiscreetly liberal.
His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and gattles, in his own defence. Dry.

The dame has been too lavish of her feast,
And sed him till he loaths. Rome's June Shore.

2. Scattered in waste; profuse; as, the cost was lavish.

3. Wild; unrestrained.
Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him, curbing his lavish spirit. Shakspeare.

L A U

To LA'VISH. v. a. [from the adjective.] To scatter with profusion; to waste; to squander.

Should we thus lend them to a field of slaughter,
Might not th' impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands?
Addison.

LA'VISH. n. f. [from lavish.] A prodigal; a profuse man.

LA'VISHLY. adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.

My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakspeare.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets
crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.

Prairie to a wit is like rain to a tender flower; if it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives;
but if too lavishly, overcharges and deprecates him.
Pope.

LA'VISHMENT. } n. f. [from lavish.]
LA'VISHNESS. } Prodigality; profusion.

First got with guile, and then prefer'd with dread,
And after spent with pride and lavishment. F. Queen.

To LAUNCH. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lancer, because a ship is pushed into water with great force.]

1. To force a vessel into the sea.
Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. Luke.

So short a stay prevails;
He soon equips the ships, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch. Dryden.

For general history, Raleigh and Howell are to be had. He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whewell. Locke.

2. To rove at large; to expatiate; to make excursions.

From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind. Dry.
Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.

Spenser has not contented himself with submissive imitation: he launches out into very flowery paths, which still conduct him into one great road. Prior.

He had not acted in the character of a suppliant,
if he had launched out into a long oration. Brown.
I have launched out of my subject on this article.
Arbushnot.

To LAUNCH. v. a.

1. To push to sea.
All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England. King Charles.

* With flays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And roll'd on leavers, launch'd her in the deep. Pope.

2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better written lance or lance.

The king of Heaven, obscure on high,
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His written bolt, not smoking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook. Dryden.

LAUND. n. f. [lande, French; laund, Welsh.] Lawn; a plain extended between woods. Hammer.

Under this thick-grown brake we'll breed ourselves;
For through this laund anon the deer will come;
And in this covert will we make our stand. Shakspeare.

LA'UNDRESS. n. f. [lavandiere, French:]
Skinner imagines that lavandresse may have been the old word.] A woman whose employment is to wash clothes.

The countess of Richmond would often say, On condition the princes of Christendom would quench against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their laundress. Candlen.

Take up these cloths here quickly; carry them to the laundress in Datchet Mead. Shakspeare.

The laundress must be sure to tear her stockings in the washing, and yet wash them but last. Swift.

LAUNDRY, n. f. [as if launderie.]

1. The room in which clothes are washed.
The affairs of the family ought to be consulted, whether they concern the stable, dairy, the poultry, or laundry. Swift.

2. The act or state of washing.

Chalky water is too fretting, as appeareth in laundry of cloaths, which wear out apace. Bacon.

LAFFOLTA, n. f. [la folle, French.] An old dance, in which was much turning and much capering. Hanmer.

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lao; nor sweeten talk;
Nor play at fiddle games. Shakespeare.

LAUREATE, adj. [laureatus, Lat.] Decked or invested with a laurel.

Ed Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodills fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureate hearth where Lycid lies. Milton.

Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines. Pope.
LAUREATION, n. f. [from laureate.] It denotes, in the Scottish universities, the act or state of having degrees conferred, as they have in some of them a flowery crown, in imitation of laurel among the ancients.

LAUREL, n. f. [laurus, Lat. laurier, Fr.] A tree, called also the cherry bay.
The laurel or laurel of the ancients is affirmed by naturalists to be what we call the bay tree. Ainsworth.

The laurel, meed of mighty conquerors,
And poets' rage. Fairly Queen.

The laurel or cherry-bay, by cutting away the side branches, will rise to a large tree. Motimer.

LAURELL, adj. [from laurel.] Crowned or decorated with laurel; laureate.

Hear'st thou the news? my friend! th' express is come.

With laurel'd letters from the camp to Rome. Dry.

Then future ages with delight shall see How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's, books agree;
Or in fair scenes laurel'd bards be shown.

A Virgil there, and here an Addison. Pope.

LAW, n. f. [laga, Saxon; loi, French; laugh, Erse.]

1. A rule of action.

That which doth assign unto each thing the kind,
That which doth moderate the force and power,
That which doth appoint the form and measure of working; the same we term a law. Hooker.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleasing to his children's cause. Dryden.

2. A decree, edict, statute, or custom, publicly established as a rule of justice.

Ordain them laws, part such as appertain
To civil justice, part religious rites. Milton.

Our nation would not give laws to the Irish, therefore now the Irish gave laws to them. Davies on Ireland.

3. A decree authoritatively annexing rewards or punishments to certain actions.

So many laws argue so many sins. Milton.

Laws politique among men pretending man to be rebellious. Hooker.

4. Judicial process.

When every case in law is right. Shakespeare.

He hath retired law,
And therefore law shall learn him further trial
Than the severity of public power. Shakespeare.

Tom Touchy is a fellow famous for taking the law of every body: there is not one in the town where he lives that he has not sued at a quarter-sessions.

5. A distinct edict or rule.

One law is split into two. Baker on Learning.

6. Conformity to law; any thing lawful.

In a rebellion,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was law,
Then were they chosen. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by these shadowy expiations. Milton.

10. The books in which the Jewish religion is delivered: distinguished from the prophets.

11. A particular form or mode of trying and judging: as, law martial, law mercantile: the ecclesiastical law whereby we are governed.

12. Jurisprudence; the study of law: as, a doctor of law.

LAWFUL, adj. [law and full.] Agreeable to law; conformable to law; allowed by law; legitimate; legal.

It is not lawful for thee to have her. Matthew.

Gloster's bastard son was kinder to his father, than my daughters got 'twixen lawful beds. Shak.

LAWFULLY, adv. [from lawful.] Legally; agreeably to law.

This bond is forfeit;
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

Though it be not against strict justice for a man to do those things which he might otherwise lawfully do, albeit his neighbour doth take occasion from thence to conceive in his mind a false belief, yet Christian charity will, in many cases, restrain a man.

I may be allowed to tell your lordship, the king of poets, what an extent of power you have, and how lawfully you may exercise it. Dryden.

LAWFULNESS, n. f. [from lawful.] Legality; allowance of law.

It were an error to speak further, till I may see some found foundation laid of the lawfulness of the action. Bacon.

LAWGIVER, n. f. [law and giver.] Legislator; one that makes laws.

Solomon we esteem as the lawgiver of our nation. Bacon.

A law may be very reasonable in itself, although one does not know the reason of the lawgivers. Swift.

LAWGIVING, adj. [law and giving.] Legislative.

Lawgiving heroes, fain'd for taming brutes,
And raising cities with their charming lutes. Waller.

LAWFESS, adj. [from law.]

1. Unrestrained by any law; not subject to law.

The necessity of war, which among human actions is the most lawless, hath some kind of affinity with the necessity of law. Raleigh's Essays.

The lawless tyrant, who denies
To know their God, or message to regard,
Must be compell'd.

Orpheus did not, as poets feign, time savage, beasts,

But men as lawless, and as wild as they. Roscom.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove, will bear
Thy lawless wand'ring walks in open air. Dryden.

Blind as the Cyclops, and as blind as he,
They own'd a lawless savage liberty,
Like that our painted ancestors so priz'd,
Ere empire's arts their beasts had civiliz'd. Dryd.

He meteor-like, flames lawless through the void,
Destroying others, by himself destroy'd. Pope.

2. Contrary to law; illegal.

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arms,
He needs no indirect or lawless course
To cut off those that have offended him. Shaksp.

We cite our faults, &c.
That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives. Shak.

Thou the first, lay down thy lawless claim;
Thou of my blood who bear'st the Indian name. Dryden.

LAWFESSLY, adv. [from lawless.] In a manner contrary to law.

Fear not, he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly. Shakespeare.

LA'WMAKER, n. f. [law and maker.] Legislator; one who makes laws; a lawgiver.

Their judgment is, that the church of Christ should admit no lawmakers but the evangelists. Hooker.

LAWN, n. f. [land, Danish; lawn, Welsh; lande, French.]

1. An open space between woods.

Between them lawns, or level downs, and flocks
Grazing the tender herb, were interpos'd. Milton.

His mountains were shaded with young trees,
That gradually shot up into groves, woods, and forests, intermix'd with walks, and lawns, and gardens. Addison.

Stern beasts in trains that by his trunk heon fell,
Now grilly forms shoot o'er the lawns of hell. Pope.

Interpos'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that flum each other's shades. Pope.

2. [linon, Fr.] Fine linen, remarkable for being used in the sleeves of bishops.

Should'st thou bleed,
To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear,
Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair. Prior.

From high life high characters are drawn,
A faint in crape is twice a faint in lawn. Pope.

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire;
The duties by the lawn rob'd prelate pay'd,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd! Tickell.

LA'WSUIT, n. f. [law and suit.] A process in law; a litigation.

The giving the priest a right to the tithes would produce lawsuits and wrangles; his attendance on the courts of justice would leave his people without a spiritual guide. Swift.

LA'WYER, n. f. [from law.] Professor of law; advocate; pleader.

It like the breath of an unfeeling lawyer, you gave me nothing for it. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Is the law evil, because some lawyers in their office twerpe from it? Whitgate.

I have entered into a work touching laws, in a middle term, between the speculative and received discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers. Bacon's Holy War.

The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes,
When the defendant's counsel rose;
And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
With impudence own'd all the fact. Swift.

LAX, adj. [laxus, Latin.]

1. Loose; not confined.

Inhabit lax, ye powers of heav'n! Milton.

2. Diluted; not strongly combined.

In mines, those parts of the earth which abound with strata of stone, suffer much more than those which consist of gravel, and the like laxer matter, which more easily give way. Woodward.

3. Vague; not rigidly exact.

Dialogues were only lax and moral discourses. Balcan.

4. Loose in body, so as to go frequently to stool: laxative medicines are such as promote that disposition. Quincy.

5. Slack; not tense.

By a branch of the auditory nerve that goes between the ear and the palate, they can hear themselves, though their outward ear be stop'd by the lax membrane to all sounds that come that way. Hobler's Elements of Speech.

LAX, n. f. A looseness; a diarrhoea.

LAXATION, n. f. [laxatio, Latin.]

1. The act of loosening or slackening.

2. The state of being loosened or slackened.

LAXATIVE, adj. [laxativ, Fr. laxo, Lat.] Having the power to ease costiveness.

Omitting honey, which is of a laxative power itself; the powder of leadstones doth rather congregate and bind, than purge and loosen the belly. Brown.

L A Y

The oil in wax is emollient, laxative, and anodyne. Arbutus on ailments.

LA'XATIVE. n. f. A medicine slightly purgative; a medicine that relaxes the bowels without stimulation.

Nought profits him to have abandon'd life,
Nor vomits upward aid, nor downward laxative.
Dryden.

LA'XATIVENESS. n. f. [from laxative.]

Power of easing costiveness.

LA'XITY. n. f. [laxitas, Latin.]

1. Not compression; not close cohesion; slackness of texture.

The former causes could never beget whirlpools in a chaos of so great a laxity and thinness. Beatty.

2. Contrariety to rigorous precision; as, laxity of expression.

3. Looseness; not costiveness.

If sometimes it cause any laxity, it is in the same way with iron unprepared, which will disturb some bodies, and work by purge and vomit. Brown.

4. Slackness; contrariety to tension.

Laxity of a fibre, is that degree of cohesion in its parts which a small force can alter, so as to increase its length beyond what is natural. Quincy.

In consideration of the laxity of their eyes, they are subject to relapse. Wijeman's Surgery.

5. Openness; not closeness.

Hold a piece of paper close by the flame of a candle, and by little and little remove it further off, and there is upon the paper some part of that which I see in the candle, and it grows full less and less as I remove; so that if I would trust my sense, I should believe it as very a body upon the paper as in the candle, though interceded by the laxity of the medium in which it flows. Digby on Bodica.

LA'XNESS. n. f. Laxity; not tension; not precision; not costiveness.

For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched; otherwise, the laxness of that membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound.
Holter's Elements of Speech.

LAY. Preterit of lie.

O! would the spirit lay upon our heads. Shaks.
He was formerly at painted with him at such time as he forebore adulation at Constantople. Knight.

When Abel had heard those words he talked,
and lay in his bed. 1 Kings.

It lay'd white on the Godhead lay. Dryden.

He lay'd to rest in the prey.

That shaded by the trees in his hour lay.

And thence he lay. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Leaving Rome, he lay to Seville, I lay the first night at a village in the territories of the ancient Ven. Addison.

How could he have the retin'd of the cloister, to perform all those acts of devotion in, when the burthen of the reformation lay upon his shoulders?
Francis Atterbury.

The presbyterians argued, that if the Presbyter should invade those parts where the numbers and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay, they would sit still. Swift.

To LAY. v. a. [leggan, Saxon; leggen,
Dutch.]

1. To place; to put; to repose. This word being correlative to lie, involves commonly immobility or extension; a punishment laid is a punishment that cannot be shaken off; in immobility is included weight. One house laid to another, implies extension.

He laid his robe from him. Jonah.

They have laid their swords under their heads.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid. Milt.

He sacrificing laid

The entrails on the wood. Milton.

2. To place along.

Seek not to be judge, being not able to take away iniquity, but at any time thou fear the person of the mighty, and lay a stumbling-block in the way of thy uprightness. Ecclesiasticus.

L A Y

A lawn was laid on the mouth of the den. Dan.
3. To beat down corn or grafs.

Alas! that ill accident is laying of corn with great rain in harvest. Bacon's Natural History.

Let no sheep there play,
Nor frisking kids the flow'ry meadows lay. May.

4. To keep from rising; to settle; to still.

I'll use th' advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood.

Shakspeare.

It was a sandy soil, and the way had been full of dust; but an hour or two before a refreshing fragrant shower of rain had laid the dust. May.

5. To fix deep; to dispose regularly;

either of these notions may be conceived from the following examples; but regularity seems rather implied; so we lay, to lay bricks; to lay planks.

Schismatics, outlaws, or criminal persons, are not fit to lay the foundation of a new colony. Bac.

I lay the deep foundations of a wall.

And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden.

Men will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge; I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued lays those foundations surer. Locke.

6. To put; to place.

Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again; but to my thinking, he was very loth to lay his fingers on it. Shak. Julius Caesar.

Till us death lay

To ripe and mellow, we are but sinhorn clay. Donne.

They shall lay hands on the sick, and recover.

Mark.

They, who so state a question, do no more but separate and disentangle the parts of it, one from another, and lay them, when so disentangled, in their due order. Locke.

We to thy name our annual rites will pay,
And on thy altars sacrifices lay. Pope's Statius.

7. To bury; to inter.

David fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption. Acts.

8. To station or place privily.

Lay thee an ambush for the city behind thee.

Joshua.

The wicked have laid a snare for me. Psalm.

Lay not wait, O wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous. Proverbs.

9. To spread on a surface.

The colouring upon those maps should be laid on so thin, as not to obscure or conceal any part of the hues. Watts.

10. To paint; to enamel.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours; and if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

11. To put into any state of quiet.

They bragged, that they doubted not but to slave, and lay asleep, the queen and council of England. Bacon.

12. To calm; to still; to quiet; to allay.

Friends, loud tumults are not laid.

With half the conflicts that they are rais'd. Jonson.

Thus put'd the night to foul, till morning fair
Came forth with pilgrim steps in purple grey.

Who with her radiant finger full'd the roar
Of thunder, chas'd the clouds, and laid the winds.

Milton.

After a tempest, when the winds are laid,
The calm sea wouders at the rocks it made. Walter.

I fear'd I should have found

A tempest in your soul, and came to land. Denham.

At once the wind was laid, the whistling sound
Was dumb, a rising earthquake rock'd the ground.

Dryden.

13. To prohibit a spirit to walk.

The husband found no charm to lay the devil in a petticoat, but the rattling of a bladder with beans in it. L'Estrange.

14. To set on the table.

I laid meat unto them. Hosea.

15. To propagate plants by fixing their twigs in the ground.

The chief time of laying gillflowers is in July, when the flowers are gone. Mortimer's Husbandry.

L A Y

16. To wager; to stake.

But since you will be mad, and since you may Suspect my courage, if I should not lay;
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dry. Vir.

17. To repose any thing.

The sparrow hath found an house, and the swallow a nest for herself, where she may lay her young. Psalm.

18. To exclude eggs.

After the egg is lay'd, there is no further growth or nourishment from the female. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A hen mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it; she is infensible of an increase or diminution in the number of those she lays. Speilator.

19. To apply with violence; as, to lay blows.

Lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it. Ezekiel.

Never more shall my torn mind be heal'd,
Nor taste the gentle comforts of repose!

A dreadful band of gloomy cares surround me,
And lay strong siege to my distracted soul. Phillips.

20. To apply nearly.

LEAD. n. f. [lab, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold and quicksilver. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11,322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoria, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. The smoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease. Hill.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare.

Of lead, some I can show you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; hereof is made common cerufs with vinegar; of cerufs, red lead; of plumbum ultimum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

persons, upon great numbers fitted leading men

LEADING-STRINGS, n. f. [lead and string.]

Strings by which children, when they learn to walk, are held from falling.

Sound in yonder flocks, ere they to battle are grown,
Like leading-strings, till they can walk alone.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, or from without bladders, without being discovered by his hobbling, and his sinking? Swift.

LEADMAN, n. f. [lead and man.] One who begins or leads a dance.

Such a light and muffled dance Saw you never,
And by leadmen for the nonce,
That in a round like gristle stones. Ben Jonson.

LEADWORT, n. f. [plumbago.] A plant.

LEAF, n. f. leaves, plural. [leaf, Saxon;
leaf, Dutch.]

1. The green deciduous parts of plants and flowers.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms.

A man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which his mission is made, if his graft have blossom buds; whereas if it were only leaf buds, it will not bear fruit till the second season. Boyle.

Those things which are removed to a distant view, ought to make but one mass; as the leaves on the trees, and the billows in the sea. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

2. A part of a book, containing two pages.

Many ye leaves, when as those holy hands
Shall handle you. Spenser.

Peruse my leaves through ev'ry part,
And think thou feed'st my owner's heart
Scotw'd o'er with trifles. Swift.

3. One side of a double door.

The two leaves of the one door were folding. 1 Kg.

as truly gold as that in an ingot. Digby on Fodder.

To LEAF, v. n. [from the noun.] To bring leaves; to bear leaves.

Most trees fall off the leaves at autumn; and 'if not kept back by cold, would leaf about the fol-dices. Brown.

LEAFLESS, adj. [from leaf.] Naked of leaves.

Nare honestly, without some other adornment, being looked on as a leafless tree, nobody will take himself to its shelter. Government of the Tongue.

Where doves in flocks the leafless trees o'er shade,
And lonely woodcocks haunt the wat'ry glade. Pe.

LEAFY, adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves.

The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer was first leafy. Shaksp. Lear.

What chance, good lady, hath heretofore thus?
—Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth. Milton.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the slow'ry plain,
The leafy forest, and the liquid main,
Extends thy uncontrol'd and boundless reign. Dr.

Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,
That hells of birds, that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

So when some swift'ring travellers retire
To leafy shades, near the cool sunless verge
Of Paraba, Brazilian stream; her tail
A grisly hydra suddenly shoots forth. Philips.

LEAGUE, n. f. [ligue, Fr. ligo, Lat.] A confederacy; a combination either of interest or friendship.

You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassage
From my Redeemer, to redeem us hence.

And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n.
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth. Sh.

We come to be informed by yourselves,
What the conditions of that league must be. Shak.

Thou shalt be in league with the flocks of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Job.

Go break thy league with Baasha, that he may depart from me. 2 Chronicles.

It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacts or leagues; there are other bands of society and implicit confederations.

1, a private person, whom my country
As a league breaker gave up bound, presum'd Single rebellion, and did hostile acts. Milton.

Oh Tyrants, with immortal hate Pursue this hated race; and let there be Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Drum.

To LEAGUE, v. n. To unite on certain terms; to confederate.

Where fraud and falsehood invade for society, the band presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to lessen their dependences. South.

LEAGUE, n. f. [lieue, Fr.]

1. A league; leuca, Lat. from lech, Welsh; a stone that was used to be erected at the end of every league. Camden.

2. A measure of length, containing three miles.

Ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encountered by a mighty rock. Shaksp.

Er'a Italy, though many a league remote,
In distant echoes answer'd. Addison.

LEAGUED, adj. [from league.] Confederated.

And now thus begu'd by an eternal bond.

What shall retard the Britons bold designs? Phil.

LEAGUER, n. f. [beleggeren, Dutch.]

Siege; investment of a town.
We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adventures, when we bring him to our own tents. Shaksp. Lear.

LEAK, n. f. [lack, like, Dutch.] A breach or hole which lets in water.

There will be always evils, which no artful man can cure, breaches and leaks more than man's wit hath hands to stop. Hooker.

The water rushes in, as it doth usually in the leak of a ship. Wilkins.

Whether she sprung a leak I cannot find,
Or whether she was overcast with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryd.

To LEAK, v. n.

1. To let water in or out.

They will allow us ne'er a Jordan, and then we leak in your chimney. Shaksp. Lear.

His feet should be washed every day in cold water; and have his shoes so thin, that they might leak, and let in water. Locke.

2. To drop through a breach, or discortinuity.

The water, which will perhaps by degrees leak into several parts, may be emptied out again. Wilkins.

Golden stars hung o'er their heads,
And seem'd to crowd, that they burst upon 'em,
And dart at once their baleful influence
In leaking fire. Dryden and Lee.

LEAKAGE, n. f. [from leak.] Allowance made for accidental loss in liquid measures.

LEAKY, adj. [from leak.]

1. Battered or pierced, so as to let water in or out.

Thou'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking; for Thy dearest quit thee. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

If you have not enjoy'd what youth could give,
But life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself, you liv'd not while you might. Dr.

2. Loquacious; not close.

Women are so leaky, that I have hardly met with one that could not hold her breath longer than she could keep a secret. L'Estrange.

To LEAN, v. n. preter. leaned or leant.
[hlanan, Saxon; lenen, Dutch.]

1. To incline against; to rest against.

Lean thine aged back against mine arm,
And in that case I'll tell thee my discourse. Shaksp.

Security is express'd among the medals of Gordi-anus, by a lady leaning against a pillar, a sceptre in her hand, before an altar. Percham on Drawing.

The columns may be allowed somewhat above their ordinary length, because they lean unto so good supporters.

Upon his iv'ry sceptre first he leans,
Then shook his head, that shook the firmament.

Oppress'd with anguish, panting and o'er-sight,
His fainting limbs against an oak he leans. Dryd.

2. To propend; to tend toward.

They delight rather to lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust, and more inconvenient. Spenser.

Tru't in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. Proverbs.

A desire leaning to either side, biases the judg-

3. To be in a bending posture.

She leans me out at her mistress's chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night. Shaksp.

deserted with length of ways, and down with will,
She laid her down; and leaning on her knee,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseryes. Dryden.
The gods came downward to behold the woe,
Strap'ning their thighs, and leaping from their stars. Dryden.

LEAN. adj. [hlane, Saxon.]

1. Not fat; meagre; wanting flesh; bared-boned.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants.
Lean famine, quartering flesh, and climbing fire. Shakespeare.

Lean raw-bon'd rascals who would e'er suppose,
They had such courage and audacity! Shakespeare.
Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change. Shakespeare.

I would invent as bitter scorching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave. Shakespeare.
Seven other kine came up out of the river, ill-favoured and lean-fleshed. Genesis.

Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation. Bacon.

And fetch their precepts from the cynic tub,
Praising the lean and fallow, abstinence. Milton.
Swear that Adrastra, and the lean-look'd prophet,
Are joint conspirators. Dryden and Lee.

Lean people often suffer for want of fat, as fat people may by obstruction of the vessels. Arbuthnot.
The laughing graces wait on in my eyes;
But haggard grief, lean-looking fallow care,
Dwell on my brow. Rome's Jane Shore.

2. Not unctuous; thin; hungry.

There are two chief kinds of terrestrial liquors, those that are fat and light, and those that are lean and more earthy, like common water. Barnet.

3. Low; poor; in opposition to great or rich.

That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A lower action rend us. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

4. Jeane; not comprehensive; not embellished; me, a lean dissertation.

LEAN. n. f. That part of flesh which consists of the muscle without the fat.

With razors keen we cut our passage clean
Through hills of fat, and deluges of lean. Farragut.

LEANLY. adv. [from lean.] Meagerly; without plumpness.

LEANNESS. n. f. [from lean.]

1. Extenuation of body; want of flesh; meagreness.

If thy leanness loves such food,
There are those, that, for thy sake,
Do enough. Ben Jonson.

The symptoms of too great fluidity are excess of universal secretions, as of perspiration, sweat, urine, liquid discharges, leanish, and weakness. Arbuthnot.

2. Want of matter; thinness; poverty.

The poor king Reignier, whose large style Agrees not with the leanness of his purse. Shakespeare.

TO LEAP. v. n. [hlæpan, Saxon; leap, Scottish.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should gladly leap into a wife. Shakespeare's Henry v.

A moon leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon's Natural History.

In a narrow pit
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it. Cowden.

Thence from the ground the leap'd, was seen to wield
Her brandish'd lance. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To rush with vehemence.

God changed the spirit of the king into mildness, who in a leap from his throne, and took her to his arms, till she came to herself again. Escher.

After he went into the tent, and found her not,
he leaped out to the people. Matthew.

He ruin upon ruin leaped,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaped. Bendish.
Strait leaping from his horse, he rais'd me up. Howe.

3. To bound; to spring.

Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy. Luke.
I am warm'd, my heart Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. To fly; to start.

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out. Job.

TO LEAP. v. n.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.

Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country. L'Estrange.

As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

She dares pursue if they dare lead:
At their example fill prevails,
She tempts the stream, or leaps the pales. Prior.

2. To compress, as beads.

Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow. Dryden's Georg.

LEAP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.

Aft'r they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded? L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.

Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue; and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unnatural. L'Estrange.

The commons wrested even the power of chusing
a king intirely out of the hands of the nobles; which was so great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear. Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.

The cat made a leap at the mouse. L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.

How she cheats her bellowing lover's eye;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny. Dryden.

6. Hazard, or effect of leaping.

It thinks, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon.
Shakespeare.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where you old hilier views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryden.

LEAP-FROG. n. f. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakespeare's Henry v.

LEAP-YEAR. n. f.

A leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more that year than in a common year: so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28.

To find the leap-year you have this rule:
I divide by 4; what's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for past 1, 2, 3. Harris.

The reason of the name of leap-year is, that a day of the week is missed; as, if on one year the first of March be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday, but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.

That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave
the compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown.

TO LEARN. v. a. [leornian, Saxon.]

1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.

Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Matthew.

He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knolles.

Learn, wretches! learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of human kind. Dryden.

You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition:
All he can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Phillips.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.]
This sense is now obsolete.

He would learn
The lion sloop to him in lowly wise,
A lesson hard. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language. Shakespeare. Temp.

A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shakespeare.

Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO LEARN. v. n. To take pattern:
with of.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for
I am meek and lowly. Matthew.

Is imitation of sounds, that Men should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Natural History.

LEARNED. adj. [from learn.]

1. Versed in science and literature.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothing, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile. Pope.

The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.

The best account is given of them by their own authors: but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Skilled; skilful; knowing; with in.

Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,

Thou chusest not to conquer men but hearts. Gran.

3. Skilled in scholastick, as distinct from other knowledge.

Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.

LEARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.

The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly
mad. Hooker.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shakespeare.

Every conceit swears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LEARNING. n. f. [from learn.]

1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences;
generally scholastick knowledge.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile;
then its strength of manhood, when solid, and,
lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon.

To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.

As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.

An art of contradiction by way of scorn, & learning wherewith we were long since forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.

LEARNER. n. f. [from learn.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.

The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.

Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practise artist can. Gravitt's Bills of Mortality.

LEASE. n. f. [leiser, French. Spelman.]

1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.

Why, couldst, wert's thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shaksp.
Lords of the world have but for life their lease.
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Den.
I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops's leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.

2. Any tenure.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakspere.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short need hast thy own life's lease. Milton.
To LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tithes to the vicar. Auliffe's Purgeon.
To LEASE. v. n. [lesen, Dutch.] To glean;
to gather what the harvest men leave.

She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chase work did aspire,
Bread, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire. Dryden.

LEASER. n. f. [from lease.] Gleaner;
gatherer after the reaper.

There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of lease: and gleaners. Swift.

LEASII. n. f. [lisse, French; letse, Dutch;
laccio, Italian.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound. Hanmer.

Holding Coriolani in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakspere.

What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following My leash unwillingly. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.

2. A tierce; three.

I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names. Shaksp.
Some thought when he did gabble
Th'ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras.

Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis's Letters.

3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.

The ravished soul being thrown such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. B. p.
To LEASH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to hold in a string.

Then should the warlike Harry, the hand of Assume the part of Mars; and, at his heels,
To fight in like hounds, should tame, fear, and lead free, Crouch for employment. Shakspere's Henry v.

LEASING. n. f. [leaze, Saxon.] Lies;
falsehood.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after the thing that is idle. Isaiah.

He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell. Habb.

He hates foul leasings and vile flattery.
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Hubbert's Tale.

That false pilgrim which that leasings told,
Was indeed old Archimago. Fairy Queen.

I have ever vermed my friends
With all the lies that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a howl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leasings. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leasings,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lies detected:
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.

Trading men shall thrive again,
Not by low lewd traffic the main. Gay.

LEAST. adj. the superlative of little. [laet, Saxon. This word Wallis would persuade us to write leat, that it may be analogous to leat; but surely the profit is not worth the change.] Little beyond others;
finalled.

I am not worhy of the least of all the mercies shewed to thy servant. Genji.
A man can do more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. Locke.

LEAST. adv. In the lowest degree; in a degree below others; less than any other way.

He resolv'd to waive his suit.
Or for a while play least in fight. Hudibras.

Ev'n that avert; I chuse it not;
But taste it as the least unhappy lot. Dryden.

No man more truly knows to place a right value on your friendship, than he who least deserves it on all other accounts than his due sense of it. Pope.

At LEAST. } To say no more; not to
At the LEAST. } demand or affirm more
At LEASTWINE. } than is barely sufficient; } at the lowest degree.

He who tempts, though in vain, at least aspires
The tempted with dishonour. Milton.

He from my side subducing, took perhaps
More than enough; at least on her bellowed
Too much of ornament, in outward show Elaborate, of inward less exact. Milton.

Upon the wall they saw a young man, at least if he were a man, who sat on horseback. Sidney.

Every effect doth after a sort contain, at leastwise resemble, the cause from which it proceedeth. Hooker.

Honour and fame at least the thund'ring ow'd,
And all he pays the promise of a God. Pope.

The remedies, if any, are to be proposed from a constant course of the milk diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

A fiend may deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, at least by the tacit permission of the Omnipotent Being. Dryden.

2. It has a sense implying doubt; to say no more; to say the least; not to say all that might be said.

Whether such virtue spent now fail'd
New angels to create, if they at least
Are his created. Milton.

Let useful observation be at least some part of the subject of your conversation. Watts.

LEASY. adj. [This word seems formed from the same root with loisir, French, or loose.] Flimsy; of weak texture. Not in use.

He never leaveth, while the sense itself be left
In use and leasy. Ajsham's Schoolmaster.

LEATHER. n. f. [leDer, Saxon; lead, Erse.]

1. Dressed hides of animals.

He was a hairy man, and girl with a giddle of leather about his loins. 2 Kings.

What need you have two ludes of leather? Prior.

2. Skin; ironically.

Returning found in limb and wind,
Except some leather lost behind. Swift.

3. It is often used in composition for leathern.

The shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle;
Is far beyond a prince's delicacies. Shakspere.

LEATHERCOAT. n. f. [leather and coat.]
An apple with a tough rind.

There is a dish of leather-coats for you. Shaksp.

LEATHERDRESSER. n. f. [leather and dresser.] He who prepares leather; he who manufactures hides for use.

He removed to China; and by the way was entertained at the house of one T... a leather-dresser.

LEATHER-MOUTHD. adj. [leather and mouth.]

By a leather-mouth'd fellow, I meant such as have their teeth in their throat; as, the chub or cheven.
Wotton's Angler.

LEATHERY. adj. [from leather.] Made of leather.

I saw her hand; she has a leathery hand,
A free-stone colour'd hand: I verily did think
That her old pleasures were on. Shakspere.

The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shakspere's As you like it.

In sicken or in leathern pulse retain
A sploudid shilling. Philips.

LEATHERSELLER. n. f. [leather and seller.] He who deals in leather, and vends it.

LEATHERY. adj. [from leather.] Resembling leather.

Wormius calls this craft a leathery sin. Orren.

LEAVE. n. f. [lepe, Saxon; from lyfan, to grant.]

1. Grant of liberty; permission; allowance.

By your leave, Ireneus, notwithstanding all this your careful forethought, methinks I see an evil luck unspied. Spenser.

When him his dearest Una did behold,
Ditching life, desiring leave to dye. Spenser.

I make bold to press upon you.
—You're welcome; give us leave, drawers. Shaksp.

The days
Of Sylla's sway, when the sword took leave
To act all that it would. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Thrice happy think! that in her leave
May boldly creep; we dare not give Our thoughts to unconfin'd a leave. Water.

No friend has leave to bear away the death Dray.
Offended that we fought without his leave.

He takes this time his secret hate to show. Dryden.
One thing more I crave leave to offer about Sal- logium, before I leave it. Leahy.

I must have leave to be grateful to any who serves me, let him be never so obnoxious to any party; nor did the tory party put me to the hardship of asking this leave. Pope.

2. Farewell; adieu. In this sense leave is permission to depart.

Take leave and part, for you must part forthwith. Shakspere.

Evils that take leave,
On their departure, must of all shew evil. Shaksp.

There is further compliment of leave taking between France and him. Shakspere's King Lear.

Here my father comes;
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave. Shakspere.

But, my dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Swickling.

Many stars may be visible in our hemisphere, that are not so at present; and many shall take leave of our horizon, and appear unto southern habitations. Brown.

To LEAVE. v. a. pret. I left; I have left.
[Of the derivation of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account.]

1. To quit; to forsake.

A man shall leave his father and his mother, and cleave unto his wife. Genesis.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the wine. Ben Jon-

2. To desert; to abandon.

He that is of an unthankful mind, will leave him in danger that delivered him. Feetphakia.

3. To depart from, without action: as, I left things as I found them.

When they were departed from him, they left him in great distress. Chronicles.

4. To have remaining at death.

There be of them that have left a name behind them. Ecclesiastes.

Not to deprive of.

They tell have left me the providence of God.

LEA

and all the promises of the gospel, and my charity to them too. Taylor.

6. To suffer to remain.

If it be done without order, the mind comprehendeth less that which is set down; and besides, it leaveth a suspicion, as if more might be said than is expressed. Bacon.

These things must be left uncertain to farther discoveries in future ages. Abbot.

Who those are, to whom this right by descent belongs, he leaves out of the room of any one to discover from his writings. Locke.

7. Not to carry away.

They encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for Israel. Judges.

He shall eat the fruit of thy cattle; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil. Deut.
Vastus gave strict commandment, that they should leave behind them unnecessary baggage. Knutley's History.

8. To reject; not to choose.

In all the common incidents of life, I am superiour, I can take or leave. Steele.

9. To fix as a token or remembrance.

This I leave with my reader, as an occasion for him to consider, how much he may be beholden to experience. Locke.

10. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.

That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line,
That peace, O! happy shade! be ever thine. Dryden.

11. To give up; to resign.

Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and the stranger. Leviticus.
If a wife man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson.

12. To permit without interposition.

Whether Esau were a villain, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

13. To cease to do; to desist from.

Let us return, lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Samuel.

14. To LEAVE off. To desist from; to forbear.

If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Leete.

In proportion as old age come on, he left off fire-burning. Spectator.

15. To LEAVE off. To forsake.

He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the taverns; he put on a serious air. Irishman.

16. To LEAVE out. To omit; to neglect.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
You may mistake. I have told 'em who you are. -- I should be loth to be left out, and here too. B. Jonson.

What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.

Best friend till almost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere vice worn on the Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop hole peep. Milton.

We ask, it those subvert
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert
That we the world's existence may conceive Though we are atom out of matter leav'd. Blackm.

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgment, by Lucretius and Varro, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid. Addison.

To LEAVE. v. n.

1. To cease; to desist.

She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shaks.

And dare this business so far fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shaks.

He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest. Genius.

2. To LEAVE off. To desist.

Graves, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, where-with he perceived he little prevailed. Knutley.

LEC

But when you find that vigorous heat abate, Leave off, and for another summons wait. Rycom.

3. To LEAVE off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin,
But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Daniel.

To LEAVE. v. a. [from levy; lever, French.] To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhyme.

An army strong the leav'd,
To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

LE'AVED. adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

1. Furnished with foliage.

2. Made with leaves or folds.

I will loose the lions of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isaiah.

LE'AVEN. n. f. [levain, Fr. levare, Lat.]

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light: particularly used of four dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be baked with leaven. Leviticus.
All fermented meats and drinks are easiest digested; and those unfermented, by barnard leaven, are hardly digested. Floer.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass: it generally means something that depraves or corrupts that with which it is mixed.

Many of their propositions favour very strongly of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

To LE'AVEN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.

You must tarry the leav'ning. Shaks.
Whoever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exodus.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings, and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon.

2. To taint; to imbue.

That cruel something unpossess'd, Corrodes, and leavens all the rest. Prior.

LE'AVEN. n. f. [from leav.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register
A mother-leaver, and a fugitive. Shakespeare.

LEAVES. n. f. The plural of leaf.

Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for trees they give no nourishment at all. Bacon's Natural History.

LE'AVINGS. n. f. [from leav.] Remnant; relics; offal; refuse: it has no singular.

My father has this morning eat'd together,
To this poor hall, his little Roman tenants,
The leavings of Phalaris. Adams's Cato.

Then who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Chloe's head,
With scraps and leavings to be fed? Swift.

LE'AVY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves; covered with leaves: leafy is more used.

Strephon, with leafy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear,
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitfontide to bear. Sidney.

Now, near enough: your leafy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. Shakespeare.

To LECH. v. a. [lecher, Fr.] To lick over.

Haft thou yet lech'd the Athenian's eye
With the love juice? Shakespeare.

LE'CHER. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old French: luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.] A whoremaster.

I will now take the lecher; he's at my house;
he cannot scape me. Shakespeare.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins.
Are pleas'd to breed out young inheritors. Shaks.

The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now
In Is's place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.

The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes,
About his chattering chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.

LED

She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope.

To LE'CHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.

Die for adultery? no. The wren goes to't, and the small gildot fly does lecher in my sight. Shaks.

Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night. B. Jonson.

LE'CHEROUS. adj. [from lecher.] Lewd; lustful.

The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Derham.

LE'CHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LE'CHEROUSNESS. n. f. [from lecherous.] Lewdness.

LE'CHERY. n. f. [from lecher.] Lewdness; lust.

The rest welter with as little shame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Ajcham.

Against such lewdlers, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shaks.

LE'CTION. n. f. [lectio, Lat.] A reading; a variety in copies.

Every critic has his own hypothesis; if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentic. Watts' Logic.

LECTURE. n. f. [lecture, French.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Dametas reads his rustick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat. Sidney.

Wrangling pedant,
When in musick we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Shaks.

When letters from Caesar were given to Rusticus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lectures. Taylor's Holy Living.

Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and listen there. Locke.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.

In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text. Brown.

3. A magisterial reprimand; a pedantick discourse.

Numbata will be blest by Cato's lectures. Addison.

To LE'CTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct formally.

2. To instruct intolently and dogmatically.

To LE'CTURE. v. n. To read in public; to instruct an audience by a formal explanation or discourse: as, Wallis lectured on geometry.

LE'CTURER. n. f. [from lecture.]

1. An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture.

2. A preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.

If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Clarendon.

LE'CTURESHP. n. f. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a-year, where he preached continually in person. Swift.

LED. The part. pret. of lead.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezekiel.

The leaders of this people cause them to err, and they that are led on them are destroyed. Ezekiel.

As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not promulgated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

LEDOE. n. f. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.

The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board. Watson.

2. A ridge rising above the rest, or projecting beyond the rest.

The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Gulliver.

3. Any prominence, or rising part.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his feet he hides,
The beading brow above a fate retreat provides. Dryden.

LEDHORSE. n. f. [led and horse.] A lump-peter horse.

LEF. n. f. [lie, French.]

1. Dregs; sediment; refuse: commonly lees.

My cloaths, my sex, exchange'd for thee,
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee. Prior.

2. [Sea term; supposed by Skinner from Prou, French.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A lee-ward ship is one that is not sail'd by a wind, to make her way so good as the might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and shipwrecks flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way.

Dict.
If we, in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet. Raleigh.

The Hollanders were before Dunkirk with the wind at north-west, making a lee shore in all weathers. Raleigh.

Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore. A. Charles.

Him, haply stumbling on the Norway foam,
To pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff,
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fix'd anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invels the sea. Milton.

Butter'd by his lee they lay,
The passing winds through their torn canvases play. Dryden.

LEFCH. n. f. [lee, Saxon.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing; whence we still use couldech.

A leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of grievous confidence,
And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser's Faery Que.

Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech
His cunning hand 'gan his wounds to lay,
And all things else the which his art did teach. Fairy Queen.

Physick is their bane,
The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.

Wife leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis. Dryden.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd,
Tried every health-redoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Rowe.

A faithful leech,
They say, had wrought this blessed deed;
This leech Arbutnot was yeapt. Guy's Pastors.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood; it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name. I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Wifon.

Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood,
Without remorse insatiably. Reynolds.

TO LEECH. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with medicaments.

LEECHCRAFT. n. f. [leech and craft.] The art of healing.

We study speech, but others we persuade:
We leechcraft learn, but others cure with it. Darles.

LEEF. adj. [lieve, leve, Dutch.] Kind; fond.

Whilome all these were low and leef,
And lov'd their flocks to feed;
They never strove to be the chief,
And simple was their weed. Spenser's Pastors.

LEEK. n. f. [leac, Saxon; look, Dutch; leech, Erse; porrum, Latin.] A plant.

Know'st thou Fluellen?—Yes.
—Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate, Upon St. David's day. Shakespeare.

Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear. Guy.

We use acrid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes; in the scurvy, water-cresses, horse-radish, garlic, or leek potage. Flower on Humours.

LEER. n. f. [hleap, Saxon.]

1. An oblique view.

I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Alide the devil turn'd
For envy, yet with jealous leer malign Ey'd their advance. Milton.

2. A laboured cast of countenance.

Damn with lust praise, concede with civil leer. Pope.

I place a statesman full before my sight;
A bloated monster in all his gear,
With shameless visage, and perfidious leer. Swift.

TO LEER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To look obliquely; to look archly.

I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me. Shakespeare.

I wonder whether you taste the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.

2. To look with a forced countenance.

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,
To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin. Dryden.

LIES. n. f. [lie, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular.

The memory of king Richard was so strong,
that it lay like lies at the bottom of men's hearts;
and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up.

If they love lies, and leave the lilly wine,
Fancy them not their palates with the wine. B. Jon.

The lies that trouble it, refine
The regal soul of generous wine. Dryden.

TO LEISE. v. a. [lefen, Dutch.] To lose: an old word.

Then tell to thy profit both butter and cheese,
Who hath it to lose the more he shall leise. Tusser.

No caud, nor chint fat, will Che'st's leise;
But as the yemen on both sides he takes fees;
And pletheth both; for while he melts his grease
For this, that wins for whom he holds his power. B. Jonson.

Hox in the port our fleet dear time did leise,
Watching like prisoners, which he but for fees. Donne.

LEET. n. f.

Leet, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon lethe, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thirthing, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, he now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court.

Who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit
With meditations lawful? Shakespeare.

You would prefer her at the leet,
Because she bought some jugs, and a few d' quarts. Shakespeare.

LE'WANG. adj. [lee and wang, Saxon.] Toward the wind. See LEE.

The classics were called long ships, the oceanic round, because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the flowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they sailed full before the wind. Arbuthnot.

Let no statesman dare,
A kingdom to a ship compare;
Left he should call our commonwealth
A vessel with a double keel;
Which just like ours, new rigg'd and man'd
And got about a league from land,
By change of wind to leeward side,
The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEST. The participle preter. of leave.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;
I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shakespeare.

Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.

Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at improving than diverting; but if we will be equal to the world, we must take it as we find it. Spec.

LEIT. adj. [luste, Dutch; levis, Latin.]

Smirous; not right.

'That there is also in men a natural propensity in the right, we cannot with consistency affirm, if we make observation in children, who, permitted the freedom of both hands, do oftentimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The right to Plato's golden palace guides,
The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak,
Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak:
That oven lik'd him not. Dryden.

The left foot naked when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dry.

The man who struggles in the fight,

Using the left hand rather than right.

The limbs are used most on the right side, whereby custom helps; for we leech some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left hand most. Bacon.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver in the left side is very monstrous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Be ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand. Donne.

LEG. n. f. [leg, Danish; leggur, Icelandic.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They hallo; and what their tardy feet deny'd,
The trusty staff, then better leg supply'd. Dryden.

Punging conduits, and ants eyes,
Had almost brought him off his legs. Shakespeare.

Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison.

2. An act of obsequence; a bow with the leg drawn back.

At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap. Shakespeare.

Their horses never give a bow,
But when they make a leg, and bow. Shakespeare.

If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Locke.

He made his leg, and went away. Swift.

3. To stand on his own legs; To support himself.

Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support. Cutler.

4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.

LEGACY, n. f. [legatum, Latin.]

A legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament. Cowell.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleads that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by reading find. Hooker.

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine how to cut off some charge in legacies. Shaksp.

Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange.

When he thought you gone
T'augment the number of the bliss'd above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd his brother's portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LEGAL, adj. [legal, Fr. leges, Lat.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.

Whosoever was before Richard I. was before time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.

2. Lawful; not contrary to law.

3. According to the law of the old dispensation.

His merits
To save them, not their own, though legal, works. Milton.

LEGALITY, n. f. [legalité, Fr.] Lawfulness.

TO LEGALIZE, v. a. [legaliser, Fr. from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.

If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obliged person: but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of Heaven, that no consideration can empower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it. South.

LEGALLY, adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.

A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded. Taylor.

LEGATARY, n. f. [legataire, Fr. from legatum, Lat.] One who has a legacy left.

An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, named creditors and legatees, as unto the ordinary. Ayliffe.

LEGATE, n. f. [legatus, Lat. legat, Fr. legato, Italian.]

1. A deputy; an ambassador.

The legates from th' Eolian prince return:
Sad news they bring, that after all the cost,
And care employ'd, their embassy is lost. Dryden.

2. A kind of spiritual ambassador from the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.

Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of Heav'n. Shak.
Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before him. Atterbury.

LEGATE'S n. f. [from legatum, Lat.] One who has a legacy left him.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legates are blotted out. Dryden's Jun.
My will is, that if any of the above-named legates should die before us, that then the respective legacies shall revert to myself. Swift.

LEGATINE, adj. [from legatus.]

1. Made by a legate.

When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution; that some one shall publish such absolution. Ayliffe.

2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.

All those you have done of late,
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall in the compass of a promunire. Shakspere.

LEGATION, n. f. [legatio, Lat.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indiction of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon.

In attiring, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion colly, as in his legations. Wotton.

LEGATION, n. f. [from lego, Lat.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Suppose debate
Betwixt pretenders to a fair estate,
Bequest'd by some legator's last intent. Dryden.

LEGEND, n. f. [legenda, Lat.]

1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.

Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very neils which bred them abhorring them. Hooker.

There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the Christian and the heathen; the former, though of a frether date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison.

2. Any memorial or relation.

And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read. Fairfax.

3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.

Who can show the legends, that record
More idle tales, or fables so absurd? Blackmore.

It is the way of attaining to Heaven, that makes profane scornfuls willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent incredible legend. Bentley.

4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Addison on Medals.

LEGER, n. f. [from legger, Dutch. To lie or remain in a place.] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a leger ambassador, a resident, one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a leger-book, a book that lies in the counting-house.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to Heav'n, Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leger. Shaksp.

I've giv'n him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of leigers for her sweet. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

If leger ambassadors or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, such were made choice of as were vigilant. Bacon.

Who can endure
Thy praise too much? thou art Heav'n's leiger here, Working against the fates of death and hell. Herb.

He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay leiger for the covenant, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence. Clarendon.

I call that a leger bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait which you have ever in motion. Walton.

LEGERDEMAIN, n. f. [contracted perhaps from legereté de main, Fr.] Slight of hand; juggle; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception; knack.

Ho so light was at legerdmain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again. Hubbard.

Of all the tricks and legerdmain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention. South.

LEGERITY, n. f. [legereté, Fr.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. Not in use.

When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With castled thought and fresh legerity. Shakspere.

LEGGED, adj. [from leg.] Having legs; furnished with legs.

LEGIBLE, n. f. [legibilis, Latin.]

1. Such as may be read.

You observe some clergymen with their heads held down within an inch of the cushion, to read what is hardly legible. Swift.

2. Apparent; discoverable.

People's opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprise in his air and motion; it stamps value and significance upon his face. Cutler.

LEGIBLY, adv. [from legible.] In such a manner as may be read.

LEGION, n. f. [legio, Latin.]

1. A body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.

The most remarkable piece in Antoninus's pillar is the figure of Jupiter Pluvius sending rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. A military force.

She to foreign realms
Sends forth her dreadful legions. Philips.

3. Any great number.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd. Shak.

The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers.

LEGIONARY, adj. [from legion.]

1. Relating to a legion.

2. Containing a legion.

3. Containing a great indefinite number.

Too many applying themselves betwixt jest and earnest, make up the legionary body of error. Brown.

LEGISLATION, n. f. [from legislator, Lat.]

The act of giving laws.

Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and, like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed. Littleton.

LEGISLATIVE, adj. [from legislator.]

Giving laws; lawgiving.

Their legislative frenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Denham.

The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.

LEGISLATOR, n. f. [legislator, Latin;

legislateur, French.] A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.

It spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a law. South.

Heroes in animated marble frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone. Pope.

LEGISLATURE, n. f. [from legislator, Latin.] The power that makes laws.

Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is, or can be made. Hale.

In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws. Addison.

By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power; but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obedience due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration. Swift.

LEGITIMACY, n. f. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfulness of birth.

In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good. Ayliffe.

2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.

The legitimacy of reality of their lineage being vindicated, I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean. Woodward.

LEGITIMATE. adj. [from legitimus, Lat. legitime, French.] Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.

Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land; Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund. Shaksp.

An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a portion. Taylor.

To LEGITIMATE. v. a. [legitimer, French; from the adjective.]

1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.

Legitimate him that was a bastard. Ayliffe.

2. To make lawful.

It would be impossible for any enterprise to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and can have no influence to make it good or bad. Deacy of Plety.

LEGITIMATELY. adv. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfully.

2. Genuinely.

By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial seat; Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

LEGITIMATION. n. s. [legitimation, Fr. from legitimate.]

1. Lawful birth.

I have disclaim'd my land; Legitimation, name, and all is gone; Then, good my mother, let me know my father. Shakspere.

From whence will arise many questions of legitimation, and what in nature is the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine. Locke.

2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

LEGUME. n. s. [legume, Fr. legumen, Lat.] Seeds not reaped, but gathered by the hand; as, beans: in general, all larger seeds; pulse.

Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit. Boyle.

In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumes. Arbuthnot.

LEGUMINOUS. adj. [leguminosus, Fr. from legumen.] Belonging to pulse; consisting of pulse.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous foods: as oats, barley, and wheat: or of some of the siliquose or leguminous; as, peas or beans. Arbuthnot.

LEISURABLY. adv. [from leisureable.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.

Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisureably ending their lives in peace, prayed for the mercies of God upon their posterity. Hooker.

LEISURABLE. adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure; not hurried; enjoying leisure.

A relation inexcusable in his works of leisureable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation. Brown.

LEISURE. n. s. [loisir, French.]

Freedom from business or hurry; vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.

A gentleman fell very sick, and a friend said to him, Send for a physician; but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care. Temple.

You may enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to that of nothing which can distinguish your mind. Dryden.

2. Convenience of time.

We'll make our leisure to attend on you. Shakspere.

They summon'd up their manly, Frank took horse; Commanded me to follow, and attend The leisure of their answer. Shakspere.

O happy youth!

For whom thy fates reserve to fair a bride: He sigh'd, and bid us leisure more to say, His honour call'd his eyes another way. Dryden.

I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure. Locke.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.

More than I have said, loving countrymen, The leisure and enforcement of the time Forbids to dwell on. Shakspere's Richard III.

LEISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry. He was the wretchedest thing when he was young. So long a growing, and so leisurely That, if the rule be true, he should be gracious. Shakspere.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march. Hayward.

The bridge is human life: upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of three score and ten intricate arches. Addison.

LEISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately. The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste, Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might ran; Or if with caution leisurely we pass, Their numerous groins might charge us one by one. Dryden.

We descended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison.

LEMAN. n. s. [Generally supposed to be laimant, the lover, Fr. but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from leef, Dut. or leop, Sax. beloved and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leveman.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress. Hannmer.

Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye; But vanquish'd, thine eternal bonds slave make, And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take. Spenser.

A cup of wine, That's brisk and fine, And drink unto the leman mine. Shakspere.

LE'MMA. n. s. [λέμμα; lemme, French.]

A proposition previously assumed.

LE'MON. n. s. [limon, Fr. limonium, low Latin.]

1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.

The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges. Arbuthnot.

The dyers use it for dyeing of bright yellows and lemon colours. Mortimer.

Bear me, Pomona!

To where the lemon and the piercing lime, With the deep orange, glowing through the green, Their lighter glories blend. Thomson.

2. The tree that bears lemons.

The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves; the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty. Miller.

LEMONADE. n. s. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

Them, and thy wife, and children, should walk in my garden, buy toys, and drink lemonade. Arbut.

To LEND. v. a. preterit, and part. pass. lent; [lennan, Sax. leenen, Dut.]

to that of nothing which can distinguish your mind. Dryden.

1. To supply, or contribute to the support of.

In common worldly things he call'd a miser With dull unwillingness to pay a debt, Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent; Much more to be thus opposite with Heaven. Shaksp.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend; To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend. Shaksp.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be reformed.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me. Shakspere.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to lend; Now can we spare you long, though often we may lend. Dryden.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Coveousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back again. Deacy of Plety.

Painting and poetry are two sisters to take, that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poetry, and the other a speaking picture. Dryden's Description.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing care, Now lend assistance, and relieve the poet. Dryden.

Cato, lend me for a while thy patience, And condescend to hear a young man speak. Addison.

Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress's eyes. Phil.

LENDER. n. s. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade. Bacon.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers doors, To call in money. Dryden's Spanish Fryer.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger. Addison.

LENGTH. n. s. [from leng, Sax.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Tiverton a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty: it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times. Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mercutius rushes on his foes, And first unhappy Aeron overthrows; Stretch'd at his length he spurs the swarting ground. Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores Between my father and my mother lay. Shaksp.

To get from th' uneasy, and Ralph, free; Left danger, fears, and foes, behind, And bent, at least, three lengths the wind. Hudib.

Time glides along with undiscover'd haste, The future but a length beyond the past. Dryden.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you pass'd, What storms sustain'd, and on what shores been cast? Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of its extension, duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths. Locke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May hear a great monarch, still improving his state, With length of days, and every day like the first. Dryden.

Such toil requir'd the Roman name, Such length of labour for to visit a friend. Dryden.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain, and make one mountain with that on which it now stands. Addison.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the sciences have advanced. Watts.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.
 If Lætitia, who lent me this account, will acquiesce me with the worthy gentleman's name, I will insert
 it at length in one of my papers. Spectator.

8. Distance.
 He had marched to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of besieging. Clarendon.

9. End; latter part of any assignable time.
 Churches purged of things burdensome, all was brought at the length unto that wherein we now stand. Hooker.

A crooked stick is not straitened, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between them both. Hooker.

10. At LENGTH. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.

At length, at length, I have thee in my arms,
 Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard,
 And held us long asunder. Dryden.

To LENGTHEN. v. a. [from length.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.

Relaxing the fibres, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthened without rupture. Arbuthnot.

Feeling dew with spangles deck'd the glade,
 And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade. Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.

Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
 Which but a thousand harms, and lengthens life.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor: if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Daniel.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come, and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity. Aster.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, beside helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them. Dryden.

4. To LENGTHEN out. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
 A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryden.

To lengthen out the payment of my tears. Dryden.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words. Addison.

To LENGTHEN. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One may as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value. Locke.

Still his further from its end;

Still finds its error lengthen with its way. Prior.

LENGTHWISE. adv. [length and wise.]
 According to the length; in a longitudinal direction.

LENTEN. adj. [leniens, Latin.]

1. Affusive; softening; mitigating.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy;
 Time, that of all things lays his lent on hand,
 Yet cannot this; it sticks to our last land. Pope.

2. With of.

Consolatories writ
 With study, argument, and much persuasion taught Lætitia of grief and anxious thought. Milton.

3. Laxative; emollient.

Ons relax the fibres, are lenient, balsamick, and whole acrimony in the blood. Arbuthnot.

LENTIFY. n. f. An emollient, or affusive application.

I dressed it with lenients. Wyllman's Surgery.

To LENTIFY. v. n. [lenifier, old Fr. lenia, Lat.] To assuage; to mitigate.

Used for squinancies and inflammations in the throat, it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenify-

All softening simples, known of low degree, as he presses out, and pours their noble juice.
 These first infus'd, to lenify the pain,
 He tugs with pinners, but he tugs in vain. Dryden.

LENTIFY. adj. [lenitify, Fr. lenio, Lat.]

Affusive; emollient.

Some plants have a milk in them; the cause may be an inunction of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive. Bacon.

There is a lenient lenitive expelling the sucres without stimulating the bowels; such are animal oils. Arbuthnot.

LENTIFY. n. f.

1. Any thing medicinally applied to ease pain.

2. A palliative.

There are lenitives that friendship will apply, before it would be brought to delectatory rigours. South.

LENTIFY. n. f. [lenitas, Lat.] Mildness; mercy; tenderness; softness of temper.

Henry gives content,
 Of meer compassion, and of lenity.

To ease your country. Shakespeare.

Lenity must gain
 The mighty men, and please the discontent. Daniel.

Albeit to amply a pardon was proclaimed touching treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with severity, or with lenity be abated.

Hayward.

*These jealousies
 Have by one root, the old imprison'd king,
 Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd:

But when long try'd, and found supremely good,
 Like Alop's log, they leapt upon his back. Dryd.

LENS. n. f. [from resemblance to the seed of a lentil.]

A glass spherically convex on both sides, is usually called a lens; such is a burning-glass, or spectacle-glass, or an object glass of a telescope. Newton.

According to the difference of the lens, I used various distances. Newton.

LENT. The part. pass. from lent.

By Jove the stranger and the poor are sent,
 And what to those we give, to Jove is lent. Pope.

LENT. n. f. [lenten, the spring, Sax.] The quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence;
 the time from Ash Wednesday to Easter.

Lent is from lenti gage, because it falleth in the spring; for which our progenitor, the Germans, use glent. C Camden.

LENTEN. adj. [from lent.] Such as is used in lent; sparing.

My tent, if you delight not in man, what lenten entertainment the players shall receive from you!

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

She quench'd her fire at the flood,
 And with a lenten fluid cool'd her blood.

Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing scant. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

LENTICULAR. adj. [lenticular, French.]

Doubly convex: of the form of a lens.

The crystalline humour is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray on Creation.

 plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, the point of which becomes a short pod, containing orbicular seeds, for the most part convex; the leaves are conjugated, growing to one mid-rib, and are terminated by tendrils. Miller.

The Philistines were gathered together, where was a piece of ground full of lentils. 2 Samuel.

LENTISCK. n. f. [lentiscus, Lat. lentisque, Fr.] Lentisk wood is of a pale brown, almost whitish, resinous, fragrant, and acid: it is the tree which produces mastick, esteemed stringent and balsamick. Hill.

Lentisk is a beautiful evergreen, the mastick or gum of which is of use for the teeth or gums.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

LENTITUDE. n. f. [from lentus, Latin.]

Sluggishness; slowness. Ditt.

LENTNER. n. f. A kind of hawk.

I should enlarge my discourse to the observation of the haggard, and the two sorts of lentners

Walton's Angler.

LENTOR. n. f. [lentor, Lat. lentor, Fr.]

1. Tenacity; viscosity.

Some bodies have a kind of lentor, and more deceptible nature than others. Bacon.

2. Slowness; delay; sluggish coldness.

The lentor of eruptions, not inflammatory, points to an acid cause. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. [In physics.] That sly, viscid, congulated part of the blood, which, in malignant fevers, obstructs the capillary vessels.

Quincy.

LENTOUS. adj. [lentus, Latin.] Vitious;

tenacious; capable to be drawn out.

In this spawn of a lentous and transparent body, are to be discerned many specks which become black, a substance more compact and terrostrous than the other; for it riseth not in distillation.

Brown.

LEOD. n. f. Leod signifies the people; or, rather, a nation, country, &c. Thus,

Leodgar is one of great interest with the people or nation. Gibson's Camden.

LEOF. n. f. Leof denotes love; so Leofwin is a winner of love; leofan, best beloved: like these Agapetus, Erasmus, Philo, Amandus, &c. Gibson's Camden.

LEONINE. adj. [leoninus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a lion; having the nature of a lion.

2. Leonine verses are those of which the end rhymes to the middle; so named from Leo, the inventor: as

Gloria tactorum temere conceditur horum.

LEOPARD. n. f. [leo and pardus, Latin.]

A spotted beast of prey.

Sheep run not half so timorous from the wolf,
 Or horse or oxen from the leopard,

As you fly from your oft-sidled slaves. Shaksp.

A leopard is every way, in shape and actions, like a cat: his head, his eye, tongue, feet, claws, tail, all like a cat's: he boxes with his fore-feet, as a cat doth her kittens; leaps at the prey, as a cat at a mouse; and will also spit much after the same manner: so that they seem to differ, just as a kite doth from an eagle. Greece.

Before the king tame leopards led the way,
 And troops of lions innocently play. Dryden.

LEPER. n. f. [lepra, leprosus, Lat.] One infected with a leprosy.

I am no loathsome leper; look on me. Shaksp.

The leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent. Leviticus.

LEPEROUS. adj. [formed from leprosus, to make out a verse.] Causing leprosy; infected with leprosy; leprous.

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
 With juice of curd'd hebonon in a vial,
 And in the porches of mine ears did pour
 The leperous distilment. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

LEPORINE. adj. [leporinus, Lat.] Belonging to a hare; having the nature of a hare.

LEPROSITY. n. f. [from leprosus.] Squamous disease.

If the cradles, impurities, and leprositics of metals were cured, they would become gold. Bacon.

LEPROUS. n. f. [lepra, Lat. lepre, Fr.] A loathsome distemper, which covers the body with a kind of white scales.

By all the Athenian ladies, and their crop.
Be general leprosy. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
It is a plague of leprosy. Leviticus.

Between the malice of my enemies and other mens mistakes, I put as great a difference as between the itch of novelty and the leprosy of disloyalty. King Charles.

Authors, upon the first entrance of the poet, looked upon it so highly infectious, that they ran away from it as much as the Jews did from the leprosy. Wife's Surgery.

LEPROUS, adj. [lepre, Lat. lepreux, Fr.]
Infected with a leprosy.

The silly amorous sucks his death.

By drawing in a leprous harlot's breath. Donne.

Asked the cause of his great distress;

And also who, and whence, that he were,

Though he that had well yond his lere.

Thus melted his talk with many a tear. Saunders.

LE'RRY, [from lere.] A rating; a lecture.

Rudlick word.

LESS. A negative or privative termination.

[leap, Saxon; loos, Dutch.] Joined to a substantive, it implies the absence or privation of the thing expressed by that substantive: as, a witless man, a man without wit; childless, without children;

fatherless, deprived of a father; penny-

less, wanting money.

LESS, adj. [leap, Sax.] The comparative of little: opposed to greater, or to so great;
not so much, not equal.

Mary, the mother of James the less. Mark.

He that thinks he has a positive idea of infinite space will find, that he can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space;

for in this latter we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea. Locke.

All the ideas that are considered as having parts, and are capable of increase by the addition of any equal or less parts, afford us, by their repetition, the idea of infinity. Locke.

'Tis less to conquer, than to make wars cease,

And, without fighting, awe the world to peace.

Hollyday.

LESS, n. f. Not so much: opposed to more,

or to as much.

dangerous, temptation to those in adversity. Deacy by Picty.

The less space there is betwixt us and the object, and the more pure the air is, by so much the more the specks are preserved and distinguished; and, on the contrary, the more space of air there is, and the less it is pure, so much the more the object is confused and embroiled. Dryden.

Their learning lay chiefly in flourish; they were not much wiser than the less pretending multitude.

Cotter on Frude.

The less they themselves want from others, they will be less careful to supply the necessities of the indigent. Smalkelee.

Happy, and happy still, the might have prov'd,

Were the less beautiful, or less beloved. Pope.

LESSER, n. f. The person to whom a lease is given.

TO LESSEN, v. a. [from less.]

1. To make less; to diminish in bulk.

2. To diminish the degree of any state or quality; to make less intense.

Kings may give

To lessen, and not less their own greatness.

Though lessen alone will not make one happy in the other world, yet it shall lessen his punish-

Collect into one sum as great a number as you please, this multitude, how great soever, lessens not one jot the power of adding to it, or brings him any nearer the end of the inexhaustible flock of number. Locke.

This third after fame betrays him into such indecencies as are a lessening to his reputation, and is looked upon as a weakness in the greatest characters. Spectator.

Not are the pleasures which the brutal part of the creation enjoys, subject to be lessened by the un-reason which arises from fancy. Atterbury.

3. To degrade; to deprive of power or dignity.

Who seeks
To lessen thee, again his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might. Milton.

St. Paul chose to magnify his office, when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury's Sermon's.

TO LESSEN, v. n. To grow less; to shrink;
to be diminished.

All government may be esteemed to grow strong or weak, as the general opinion in those that govern is seen to lessen or increase. Temple.

The objection lessens much, and comes to no more than this, there was one witness of no good reputation. Atterbury.

LESSER, adj. A barbarous corruption of less, formed by the vulgar from the habit of terminating comparatives in er; afterward adopted by poets, and then by writers of prose, till it has all the authority which a mode originally erroneous can derive from custom.

What great despite doth fortune to thee bear,
Thus lowly to abuse thy beauty bright,
That it should not deface all other lesser light? Fairy Queen.

It is the lesser blot, modesty finds, Women to change their shapes than men their minds? Shakespeare.

The mountains, and higher parts of the earth, grow lesser and lesser from age to age: sometimes the roots of them are weakened by subterraneous fires, and sometimes tumbled by earthquakes into caverns that are under them. Burnet.

Cain, after the murder of his brother, cries out, Every man that findeth me shall slay me. By the same reason may a man, in the state of nature, punish the lesser breaches of that law. Locke.

Any heat promotes the ascent of mineral matter, but more especially of that which is subtle, and is consequently movable more easily, and with a lesser power. Woodward.

The larger here, and there the lesser lambs,
The new-fall'n young herd bleating for their dams.

Pope.

LESSER, adv. [formed by a corruption from less.]

Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him,
Do call it valiant fury. Shakespeare.

Deep written in my heart with iron pen,
That bliss may not abide in state of mortal men.

Be not jealous over the wife of thy bosom, and teach her not an evil lesson against thyself. Ecclesi.

3. Portions of scripture read in divine service.

Notwithstanding to eminent properties, whereof lessons are happily destitute; yet lessons being free from some inconveniences whereunto sermons are most subject, they may, in this respect, no less take, than in other, they must give the hand which be-cometh pre-eminence. Mass.

4. Tune pricked for an instrument.

Those good laws were like good lessons for a state out of tune; of which lessons little use can be made, till the state be made fit to be played on. Devis.

5. A rating lecture.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late,
that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

TO LESSON, v. a. [from the noun.] To teach; to instruct.

Even in kind love, I do conjure thee
To lesson me. Shakespeare.

Well hast thou lessen'd us, this shall we do. Shaks.
Children should be fashioned sometimes, and lessened into a contempt and detestation of this vice. Pfist.

must pay the small tithes to the vicar, and the great tithes to the lessor. Atterbury's Sermon.

LEST, conj. [from the adjective less.]

1. This particle may sometimes be resolved into that not, meaning prevention or care lest a thing should happen.

Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed, lest if he should exceed, then thy brother should seem vile. Deuteronomy.

Lest they faint
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
All terror hide. Milton.

My labour will sustain me, and lest cold
Or heat should injure us, his timely care Hath unthought provided. Milton.

King Laud brought hither their corps, lest it might be abused by the barbarous nations. Addison.

2. It sometimes means only that, with a kind of emphasis.

One doubt
Pursues me still, lest all I cannot die, lest that pure breath of life, the spirit of man,
Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish
With this corporeal clod. Milton.

LESTERCOCK, n. f. They have a device of two sticks filled with corks, and crossed flatlong, out of whose midst there riseth a thread, and at the same hangeth a sail; to this engine, termed a lestercock, they tie one end of their boulder, so as the wind coming from the shore filleth the sail, and the sail carrieth the boulder into the sea, which, after the respite of some hours, is drawn in again by a cord fastened at the nearer end. Carew.

TO LET, v. a. [lætan, Saxon.]

1. To allow; to suffer; to permit.

Nay, nay, quoth he, let be your strike and doubt.

Where there is a certainty and an uncertainty, let the uncertainty go, and hold to that which is certain. Bishop Sanderson.

On this crowd he cast a furious look,
And wulver'd all their strength before he spoke;
Back on your lives, let be, said he, my prey,
And let my vengeance take the destin'd way. Dry.

Remember me; speak, Raymond, will you let him? Dryden.

2. We must not let go manifest truths, because we cannot answer all questions about them. Cotter.

level; I am resolv'd to anticipate the time, and be upon the level with them now: for he is so that neither seeks nor wants them. Atterbury to Pope.

Providence, for the most part, sets us upon a level, and observes proportion in its dispensations towards us. Spectator.

I suppose, by the file of old friends, and the like, it must be somebody there of his own level;

among whom his patty have, indeed, more friends than I could wish. Swift.

5. An instrument whereby motions adjust their work.

The level is from two to ten feet long, that it may reach over a considerable length of the work; if the plumb-line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is set flat down upon the work, the work is level; but if it hangs on either side the perpendicular, the floor or work must be raised on that side, till the plumb-line hang exactly on the perpendicular. Mason.

Did murther her. Shakespeare.

Three happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
O! fast distrust and jealousy. Waller.

8. The line in which the fight passes.
Fird at first sight with what the mule impacts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
While from the boundless level of our mind
Sweat view we take, our feeble lengths behind. Pope.

LEVELLER, n. f. [from level.]

1. One who makes any thing even.

2. One who detroys superiority; one who endeavours to bring all to the same state of equality.

You are an everlasting leveler; you won't allow encouragement to extraordinary merit. Celtier

LEVELNESS, n. f. [from level.]

1. Evenness; equality of surface.

2. Equality with something else.

The river Elber is expressed lying along, for so you must remember to draw rivers, to express their levelness with the earth. Peacham.

The pestilential leavens conveyed in goods. Arab.

LEVER, n. f. [levier, French.]

The second mechanical power, is a balance supported by a hyponomochion; only the centre is not in the middle, as in the common balance, but near one end; for which reason it is used to elevate or raise a great weight; whence comes the name levers. Harris
Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? Shakespeare.

Some draw with cords, and some the monster drive.

With rolls and levers. Denham.

In a lever, the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be unfeeling to that little distance between the fulcrum and the weight;
which is always so much lesser, as the proportion between the weight and the power is greater,
and the motion itself more easy. W. Mat. Magick.
Some hoisting levers, some the wheels prepare. Dryden.

LEVERET, n. f. [lièvre, Fr.] A young hare.

Their travels o'er that silver field does show,
Like track of leverets in morning snow. Waller.

1. To rub or grind to an impalpable powder.

2. To mix till the liquor becomes smooth and uniform.

The chyle is white, as consisting of salt, oil, and water, much levigat to smooth. Arbuthnot.

LEVIGATION, n. f. [from levigate.]

Levigation is the reducing of hard bodies, as coral, tutty, and precious stones, into a subtle powder, by grinding upon marble with a muller; but unless the instruments are extremely hard, they will so wear
as to double the weight of the medicine. Quincy.

LEVITE, n. f. [levita; Lat. from Levi.]

1. One of the tribe of Levi; one born to the office of priesthood among the Jews.

In the Christian church, the office of deacon succeeded in the place of the levites among the Jews; who were as ministers and servants to the priests. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. A priest; used in contempt.

LEVITICAL, adj. [from levite.] Belonging to the Levites; making part of the religion of the Jews.

By the levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death; so heinous a crime was adultery. Ayliffe.

LEVITY, n. f. [levitas, Latin.]

1. Lightness; not heaviness; the quality by which any body has less weight than another.

He gave the form of levity to that which accented; to that which descended, the form of gravity. Raleigh.

This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the solidity that encloses it, would ascend to the top. Bentley.

2. Inconstancy; changeableness.

They every day broached some new thing; which restless levity they did interpret to be their growing in spiritual perfection. Hooker.

Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots swordknots strive,

Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive,
This erring mortals levity may call. Pope.

3. Unsteadiness; luxury of mind.

I unbosom'd all my secrets to thee.
Not out of levity, but over-power'd
By thy request. Milton's Agonistes.

He never employed his omnipotence out of levity or ostentation, but as the necessities of men required. Calamy.

5. Trifling gayety; want of seriousness.

Our graver business frowns at this levity. Shaks.

Hopton abhorred the licence, and the levities, with which he saw too many corrupted. Clarendon.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished, and a spirit of levity and libertinism, infidelity and profaneity, started up in the room of it. Atterbury.

To LEVY, v. a. [lever, French.]

1. To raise; to bring together: applied to men.

He resolved to finish the conquest of Ireland,
and to that end levied a mighty army. Davies.

2. To raise: applied to money.

Levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war.

Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his country such a sum of money. Clarendon.

3. To raise: applied to war. This sense, though Milton's, is improper.

They live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars. Milton.

LEVY, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of raising money or men.

They have already contributed all their superfluous funds, and every new levy they make must be at the expence of their farms and commerce. Addis.

with the Syriac language, have given these hints in their writings on scripture. Watts.

LEXICOGRAPHY, n. f. [λεξικός and γράφω.]
The art or practice of writing dictionaries.

LEXICON, n. f. [λεξικόν.] A dictionary;
a book teaching the signification of words.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet if he had not studied the solid things in them as well as the words and lexicons, yet he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any woman competently wife in his mother dialect only. Milton.

LEV, n. f. lee, lay, are all from the Saxon leag, a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter g or g.

Gibson's Camden.

LIABLE, n. f. [liable, from lier, old Fr.]
Obnoxious; not exempt; subject; with to.

But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burthensome,
Proudly secure, yet liable to fall.

By weakly subtleties.

The English booby of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures. Dry.
This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to many defects. Swift.

LIAR. n. f. [from lie.] This word would analogically be liar but this orthography has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from liar, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it. One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity. She's like a liar, gone to burning hell!

Twain I that kill'd her. Shakespeare's Othello.

He approves the common liar, same.

Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakespeare.

I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, whenever it seems to be contradicted. Boyle.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part,

Wife is thy voice, and noble is thy heart. Pope.

LIARD. adj.

1. Mingled roan. Markham.

2. Liard in Scotland denotes gray-haired: as, he's a liard old man.

LIBATION. n. f. [libatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacrifice, or libation to the earth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The wine so poured.

They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men. Atterbury.

The goblet then he took, with nectar crown'd,

Sprinkling the first libations on the ground. Dryden.

LIBBARD. n. f. [liebard, German; Teopardus, Lat.] A leopard.

Make the libbard stern,

Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser.

The libbard and the tiger, as the mole

Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw. Milton.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Pido resermbled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots, represent the disperseness of habitations, or towns of Africk. Brevintwood.

LIBELL. n. f. [libellus, Lat. libelle, Fr.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory, every such libel here becomes panegyric there. Decay of Poem.

Good heav'n! that fets and knives should be
To with their vile resemblance may remain!

And stand recorded, at their own request,

To future days, a libel or a jest. Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person exhibited in court.

To LIBEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation, written or printed: it is now commonly used as an active verb, without the preposition against.

Sweet seraws to fly about the streets of Rome. What's this but libelling against the senate? Shak.

He, like a privilege of spy, whom nothing can

Differed, libels now against each great man. Donne.

To LIBEL. v. a. To satirize; to lampoon.

Is the peerage of England dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? it is to be libelled, or may way defamed, he has his scandalum magnatum to punish the offender. Dryden.

But what so pure which envious tongues will spare

Some wicked wits have libell'd all the fair. Pope.

LIBELLER. n. f. [from libel.] A defamer

by writing; a lampooner.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality. Dryden's Juvenal.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners. Tattler.

The common libellers, in their invectives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth; equally common to all bodies of men. Swift.

LIBELLOUS. adj. [from libel.] Defamatory.

It was the most malicious furnise that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet. Wotton.

4. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their condition, as libertines against their patrons. Ayliffe's Perseus.

LIBERTINE. adj. [libertin, Fr.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are many that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent inquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals? Swift.

LIBERTINISM. n. f. [from libertine.] Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism, of infidelity, and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

LIBERTY. n. f. [liberté, Fr. libertas, Lat.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he sweats he'll turn me away. Shakespeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heavenly bright,

Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,

Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Exemption from tyranny or inordinate government.

Justly thou abhorrest

The son, who, on the quiet state of man

Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue

Rational liberty; yet know what, since thy original lapse, true liberty

Is lost, which always with right reason dwells,

Milton.

3. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

4. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Davies.

LIBRATION. n. f. [libratio, Lat. libration, French.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration of the body. Dryden's Darius's story.

Their planets still
In loose librations stretch'd, to track the void.
Trembling refuse. Thomson's Spring.

a. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that at full moon they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Diet. Trev.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

LIBRATORY. adj. [from libro, Lat.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICK, the plural of louse.

Red bladders rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,
And clammy dews, that loathsome lice beget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden.

LICIBANE. n. f. [lice and bane.] A plant.

LICENTSE. n. f. [licentia, Lat. licence, Fr.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser feeling that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Misidorus their chief. Sidney.

Taunt my suits
With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

They bat for freedom in their senseless moods,
And still revolt when truth would set them free;
Licence they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to license by too just a name. Rafcom.

Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence; though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself. Locke.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate. Judith.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars; could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addison on Italy.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself. Acts.

To LICENSER. v. a. [licencier, Fr.]

1. To permit by a legal grant.

Wit's Titans brav'd the fates,
And the press ground'd with licens'd blasphemies. Pope.

2. To dismiss; to send away. Not in use.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which he wou'd, that when he list he could think his thoughts. Wotton.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of licentiate or magister in this faculty. Arbuth.

To LICENTIATE. v. a. [licentier, Fr.] To permit; to encourage by licence.

We may not hazard either the stiling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse. L'Estrange.

LICENTIOUS. adj. [licenciosus, French;
licentiosus, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages pride, like corn-fed seed,
Abus'd her plenty, and sat swain increase,
To all licentious lust, and 'gan exceed
The measure of her means, and natural first need. Fairy Queen.

How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate? Shaksp.

2. Presumptuous; unconfined.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course. Rafcom.

LICENTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.]

With too much liberty; without just restraint.

The licentiates, somewhat licentious, will pardon themselves. Camden's Remains.

LICENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from licentious.]

Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Raleigh.

This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty. Swift.

During the greatest licentiousness of the press,
the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.

LICH. n. f. [lice, Saxon.] A dead carcass;

whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretel
death.

To LICK. v. a. [liccan, Saxon; lecken,
Dutch.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.

Aesculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs. Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Indidras.

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews. Dryden.

I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trash, to distinguish the age of it by its taste. Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shakspere.

3. To lick up. To devour.

Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass. Numbers.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy self,
Care'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself:
Think how posterity will treat thy name. Pope.

LICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow;
rough usage; a low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chafed bear,
and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LICKERISH. } adj. [licencius, a guttural, LICKEROUS. } Saxon. This seems to be the proper way of spelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor, but with like.]

1. Nice in the choice of food.

Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a lickerish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager, not with hunger but gulf.

It is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Stephen, fond boy, delighted, did not know
That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;
But lick'd rous, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sid.

Certain rare manuscripts, sought in the most remote parts by Ercenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits; liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Wot.

In vain he proffer'd all his goods to save
His body, destin'd to that living grave;
The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,
And nought that the man would f'ever turn. Dry.

In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it ran from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite.

This sense I doubt.

Would'st thou seek again to trap me here
With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton.

LICKERISHNESS. n. f. [from lickerish.]

Niceness of palate.

LICORICE. n. f. [γλυκίσσα; liquoricia,
Italian.] A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taste sweeter than sugar;
it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. The unspiced juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the trike of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Lill's Mat. Med.

LICTOR. n. f. [Latin.] A beadle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy factors
Will catch at us like strumpets. Shakspere.

Pro-consuls to their provinces
Hasting, or on return, in robes of state,
Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milton.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake
His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;
Though in his country town no lictors were,
Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden.

LID. n. f. [hlid, Saxon; lied, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; any stopple that covers the mouth, but not enters it.

Hops, instead of flying off wi' the rest, stuck down close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,
Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shaksp.

Our eyes have lids, our ears still open we keep. Devis.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,
As any muse's tongue could speak;
When from its lid a pearly tear Ran trickling down her beauties cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes
To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
And drive departed souls to Styx:
That rod was just a type of Sid's
Which o'er a British senate's lid
Could scatter opium full as well,
And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. f. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breeds fleas like a leech. Shaksp.

Lie. v. n. [Liege, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

Then he that lieth against me, with my sword I'll prove the lie thou liest. Shakespeare.

It is properly an adversary representation of something contrary to, or at least less, the inward truth of the mind; in other words, one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lie. Shaksp.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lie, than the will can choose an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea: but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts.

2. A charge of falsehood: to give the lie, is a formulaary phrase.

That lie shall lie to heavy on my sword, That it shall rouse vengeance and revenge; Till thou the lie givest, and that lie rest In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shaksp.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with their tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous. The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply; The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

To lie. v. n. [leagan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued live, by constantly fleeting particles of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

2. Present state; as distinct from other parts of human existence.

O live, thou nothing's younger brother! So like, that we may take the one for 't'other! Dream of a shadow! a reflection made From the false glories of the gay reflected bow, Is more a solid thing than thou!

Thou weak built illusion, that dost proudly rise Up betwixt two eternities;

Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain, But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.

When I consider live, 'tis all a cheat, Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit, Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;

To-morrow's faster than the former day; I see more; and when it says we shall be blest With some new joy, takes off what we possess.

Strange would it were none would live past years again, Yet all know how to start in what yet remain; And those that live of live think to receive What they are daily running could not give: I'm tired of waiting for this chemic gold, Which looks as young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

How'er 'tis well that while man
Through live's perverse misadventures
He can imagin'd pleasures find, Pope.

To combat against real ones.
So peaceful shalt thou end thy blasted days,
And seal thyself from live by slow decay. Pope.

3. Enjoyment, or possession of existence, as opposed to death.

Then avarice 'gan through his veins to inspire His greedy flames, and kindle live devouring fire. Spenser.

Their complot is to have my live:
And, if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness. Shakespeare.

Nor love thy live, nor hate: but what thou liv'st Live well, how long or short permit to Heaven. Milton.

He entreated me not to take his live, but exact a sum of money. Broom on the Odyssey.

The guard of a king's person.

LIFELESS. adj. [from life.]

Dead; deprived of life.

I who make the triumph of to-day,

May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,

Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier.

Unanimated; void of life.

Was I to have never parted from thy side?

As good have grown there still a lifeless rib!

Thus began

Outrage from lifeless things.

The power which produces their motions, springs from something without themselves, if this power were suspended, they would become a lifeless inactive heap of matter.

And empty words she gave, and sounding strain,

But senseless, lifeless; idol void and vain.

Wanting power, force, or spirit.

Hopeless and helpless doth Egeon wend,

But to procrastinate his lifeless end.

Unknowing to command, proud to obey

A lifeless king, a royal shade I lay.

Wanting or deprived of physical energy.

The other victor flames a moment food,

Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood.

LIFELESSLY. adv. [from lifeless.]

Without vigour; frigidly; jejunely.

That the life-weary taker may fall dead.

TO LIFT. v. a. [lyfta, Swedish; lofter, Danish. I lifted, or lift; I have lifted, or lift.]

1. To raise from the ground; to heave; to elevate; to hold on high.

Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand

For lifting food to't?

Your guests are coming;

Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day

Of celebration of that nuptial.

Propp'd by the spring, it lifts aloft the head,

But of a sickly beauty soon to shed,

In summer living, and in winter dead.

2. To bear; to support. Not in use.

So down he fell, that th' earth him underneath

Did groan, as feeble to great load to lift.

3. To rob; to plunder. Whence the term shoplifter.

So weary bees in little cells repose,

But if night robbers lift the well-lux'd hive,

An humming through their waxen city grows.

4. To exalt; to elevate mentally.

My heart was lift up in the ways of the Lord.

Of Orpheus now no more let poets tell,

To bright Cuccia greater power is given,

His numbers rais'd a shade from hell,

Hers lifts the soul to heav'n.

5. To raise in fortune.

The eye of the Lord lifted up his head from misery.

6. To raise in estimation.

Neither can it be thought, because some lessons are chosen out of the Apocrypha, that we do offer disgrace to the word of God, or lift up the writings of men above it.

7. To exalt in dignity.

See to what a godlike height

The Roman virtues lift up mortal man!

8. To elevate; to swell, as with pride.

Lifted up with pride.

Our successes have been great, and our hearts have been too much lifted up by them, so that we have reason to humble ourselves.

9. Up is sometimes emphatically added to lift.

He lift up his spear against eight hundred,

whom he slew at one time.

Answer, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand.

TO LIFT. v. n. To strive to raise by strength.

Pinch cattle of pasture while summer doth last,

And lift at their tails ere a winter be past.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken.

LIFT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The manner of lifting.

In the lift of the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees.

In races, it is not the large stride, or high lift, that makes the speed.

2. The act of lifting.

The goat gives the fox a lift, and out he springs.

3. Effort; struggle. Dead lift is an effort to raise what with the whole force cannot be moved; and figuratively any state of impotence and inability.

Myself and Trulla made a lift

To help him out at a dead lift.

Mr. Doctor had puzzled his brains

In making a ballad, but was at a stand.

And you freely must own, you were at a dead lift.

4. Lift, in Scotland, denotes a load or surcharge of any thing; as also, if one be disguised much with liquor, they say, He has got a great lift.

Then bend the great case

I have of thy health and thy welfare,

Which many wild beasts lioen in wait,

For to entrap in thy tender mesh.

LIGAMENT. n. f. [ligamentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, French.]

1. Ligament is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any sense, lest they should suffer upon the motion of the joint: their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, lest they should be dislocated with exercise.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Soul.
The incus is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes.

2. [In popular or poetical language.] Any thing which connects the parts of the body.

Though our ligaments betimes grow weak,
We must not force them till themselves they break.

3. Bond; chain; entanglement.

Men sometimes, upon the hour of departure, do speak and reason above themselves; for then the soul, beginning to be freed from the ligaments of the body, reasons like herself, and disengages in a strain above mortality.

LIGAMENTAL. } n. f. [from ligament.]

LIGAMENTOUS. } Composing a ligament.

The urachus or ligamentous passage, is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharges the watery and urinary part of its aliment.

The clavicula is inserted into the first bone of the sternum, and bound in by a strong ligamentous membrane.

LIGATION. n. f. [ligatio, Latin.]

1. The act of binding.

2. The state of being bound.

The number of the body seems to be but the waking of the soul: it is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason.

LIGATURE. n. f. [signature, French; ligatura, Latin.]

1. Any thing tied round another; bandage.

He deludeth us also by philters, ligatures, charms, and many superstitious ways in the cure of diseases.

If you slit the artery, and thrust into it a pipe, and cast a strict ligature upon that part of the artery; notwithstanding the blood hath free passage through the pipe, yet will not the artery beat below the ligature; but do but take off the ligature, it will beat immediately.

The many ligatures of our English dress check the circulation of the blood.

I found my arms and legs very strongly fastened on each side to the ground; I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my armpits to my thighs.

2. The act of binding.

The fatal noose performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood into his veins.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a strophy, as by strong ligature or compression. Arbut.

3. The state of being bound. Not very proper.

Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LIGHT. n. f. [leohr, Saxon.]

1. That material medium of light; that body by which we see; luminous matter.

Light is propagated from luminous bodies in time, and spends about seven or eight minutes of an hour in passing from the sun to the earth. Newt.

Swift roll the years, and rise the expected morn,
O spring to light, auspicious babe be born! Pope.

6. Artificial illumination.

Seven lamps shall give light. Numbers.

7. Illumination of mind; instruction; knowledge.

Of those things which are for direction of all the parts of our life needful, and not impossible to be discerned by the light of nature itself, are there not many which few mens natural capacity hath been able to find out? Hooker.

Light may be taken from the experiment of the horse-tooth ring, how that those things which adjuge the brise of the spirits, do help discusse contrary to the intention desired. Bacon.

I will place within them as a guide
My umpire conscience, whom if they will hear,
Light after light well us'd they shall attain,
And to the end perfiting safe arrive. Milton.

I opened Ariosto in Italian, and the very first two lines gave me light to all I could desire. Dry.
If internal light, or any proposition which we take for inspired, be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is a settled revelation, reason warrants it. Locke.

The ordinary words of language, and our common use of them, would have given us light into the nature of our ideas, if considered with attention. Locke.

The books of Varro concerning navigation are lost, which no doubt would have given us great light in those matters. Arbutnot.

8. The part of a picture which is drawn with bright colours, or in which the light is supposed to fall.

Never admit two equal lights in the same picture; but the greater light must strike forcibly on those places of the picture where the principal figures are; diminishing as it comes nearer the borders. Dryden.

9. Reach of knowledge; mental view.

Light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him. Daniel.

We saw as it were thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South Sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents that hitherto were not come to light. Bacon.

They have brought to light not a few profitable experiments. Bacon.

10. Point of view; situation, direction in which the light falls.

Frequent consideration of a thing wears off the strangeness of it; and shews it in its several lights, and various ways of appearance, to the view of the mind. Smith.

It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider any thing in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights. Spectator.

An author who has not learned the art of ranging his thoughts, and setting them in proper lights, will lose himself in his confusion. Spectator.

11. Publick view; publick notice.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light?
Hear'st thou I was born for nothing but to write. Pope.

12. The publick.

Grave epistles bring vice to light,
Such as a king might send, a bishop write. Pope.

13. Explanation.

I have endeavour'd, throughout this discourse, that every former part might give strength unto all that follow, and every latter bring some light unto all before. Hooker.

We should compare places of scripture treating of the same point: thus one part of the sacred text could not fail to give light unto another. Locke.

14. Any thing that gives light; a pharos; a taper; any luminous body.

That light you see is burning in my hall;
How far that little candle throws his beams,
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shaksp.
Then he called for a light, and sprang in and fell down before Paul. Acts.

I have felt thee to be a light of the Gentiles, for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Acts.

Let them be for signs,
For seasons, and for days, and circling years;
And let them be for lights, as I ordain
Their office in the firmament of heav'n,
To give light on the earth. Milton.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and a meteor. Glauville.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand to thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

I will make some offers at their safety, by fixing some marks like lights upon a coast, by which the ships may avoid at least known rocks. Temple.

He must still mourn
The sun, and moon, and ev'ry starry light, Eclips'd to him, and lost in everlasting night. Prior.

LIGHT. adj. [leohr, Saxon.]

1. Not tending to the centre with great force; not heavy.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And tott with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

These weights did not exert their natural gravity till they were laid in the golden balance, inasmuch that I could not guess which was light or heavy whilst I held them in my hand. Spectator.

2. Not hardenome; easy to be worn, or carried, or lifted; not onerous.

Horse, oven, plough, tumbril, cart, waggon, and wain,
The lighter and stronger the greater thy gain, Tuff. Shaksp.

The mariners were afraid, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. Jonah.

3. To make less heavy.

Long since with woe
Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof,
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Milton.

In offices of love how we may lighten
Each other's burden. Milton.

4. To exhilarate; to cheer.

A trusty villain, very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jest. Shaksf.

The audience are grown weary of continued melancholy scenes; and few tragedies shall succeed in this age, if they are not lightened with a course of mirth. Dryden.

5. [from light, to make light.]

A heavy boat into which ships are lightened or unloaded.

They have dock boats for passengers, and lighters for burthen. Carver.

He climb'd a stranded lighter's height,
Shot to the black abyss, and plung'd downright. Pope.

6. [lighten, and man.]

One who manages a lighter.

Where much shipping is employed, whatever becomes of the merchant, multitudes of people will be gainers; as shipwrights, butchers, carmen, and lightermen. Child.

7. [light and finger.]

Nimble at conversation; thievish.

8. [light and foot.]

Nimble in running or dancing; active.

Him so far had horn his lightfoot speed,
Pricked with wrath and fiery horse disdain,
That him to follow was but fruitless pain. Fairy Q.

And all the troop of lightfoot Palades Flock all about to see her lovely face. Spenser.

LEIGHTEN, v. n. [light and heart.]

1. Unsteady; loose; thoughtless; weak.

The English Liturgy, how piously and wisely forever framed, had found great opposition; the ceremonies had wrought only upon light-headed, weak men, yet learned men excepted against some particulars. Charlton.

2. Delirious; disordered in the mind by disease.

LEIGHTENED, v. n. [light and heart.]

Gny; merry; airy; cheerful.

LEIGHTENING, n. s. [light and heart.]

A high building, at the top of which lights are hung to guide ships at sea.

This grave partakes the fleshly birth,
Which cover lightly gentle earth. Ben Jonson.

2. Without deep impression.

The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

3. Easily; readily; without difficulty; of course.

If they write or speak publicly but five words, one of them is lightly about the dangerous citadel of the church of England in respect of abused ceremonies. Hooker.

Believe 't not lightly that your son
Will not exceed the common, or be caught
With cautious bait and practice. Shak. Coriol.

Short summer lightly has a forward spring. Shak.

4. Without reason.

Flatter not the rich; neither do thou willingly or lightly appear before great personages. Taylor.

Let every man that hath a calling be diligent in performance of its employment, so as not lightly, or without reasonable occasion, to neglect it. Taylor.

5. Without dejection; cheerfully!

Bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it, Seeming to bear it lightly. Shaksf. Ant. and Cleop.

6. Not chaste.

If I were lightly disposed, I could fill perhaps have offers, that some who hold their heads higher, would be glad to accept. Swift.

7. Nimble; with agility; not heavily or turdily.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank;
When on a sudden, Tyrimond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er;
Leaping and bounding on the billows' heads,
Till lately we had reach'd the farther shore. Dry.

8. Gayly; airily; with levity; without heed or care.

LEIGHTMIND, v. n. [light and mind.]

Unsettled; unsteady.

He that is hasty to give credit is light-minded. Hecelesiasticus.

LEIGHTNESS, n. s. [from light.]

1. Want of weight; absence of weight:
the contrary to heaviness.

Some are for masts of ships, as fir and pine, because of their length, straightness, and lightness. Bacon's Natural History.

Suppose many degrees of lightness and lightness in particles, so as many might float in the air a good while before they fell. Burnet.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness.

For, unto knight there is no greater shame,
Than lightness and inconstancy in love. P. Quere.

Of two things they will chide one; namely, whether they would, to their lightness disagree, with ridiculous lightness, dignify him, while reflection they had in to immoderate manner desired, or else conducted unto that demand. Hooker.

As I blow this feather from my face,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greatest gulf;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shaksp.

3. Uneasiness; want of conduct of women.
Is it the disdain of my estate, or the opinion of my lightness, that emboldened such base fancies towards me? Sidney.

Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense,
Than woman's lightness? Shaksp. for Meis.

4. Agility; nimbleness.
LAUGHTING. n. f. [from lighten, lightening, lightning.]

1. The flash that attends thunder.
Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and there ending, so that it is only momentaneous. Muichenbrock.

Some think the lightning born before the thunder;

What tells us then they both together are? Duties.

Salmonous, setting cruel pains I found
For emulating Jove; the rattling sound
Of mimic thunder, and the glutting blaze
Of pointed lightnings, and their torry rays. Dryden.

No warning of the approach of flame,
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd,
I burnt the moment I beheld. Granville.

2. Mitigation; abatement, [from to lighten, to make less heavy.]

How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? whom their keepers call
A lightning before death. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
We were once in hopes of his recovery, upon a kind mischance from the widow; but this only proved a lightning before death. Spenser.

LIGHTS. n. f. [supposed to be called so from their lightness in proportion to their bulk.] The lungs; the organs of breathing; we say, lights of other animals, and lungs of men.

The complaint is chiefly from the lights, a part as of no quick sense, so no feat for any sharp debate. Hayward.

LIGHTSOME. adj. [from light.]

1. Luminous; not dark; not obscure; not opaque.

Neither the sun, nor any thing sensible is that light itself, which is the cause that things are lightsome, though it make itself, and all things else, visible; but a body most enlightened, by whom the neighbouring region, which the Greeks call aether, the place of the supposed element of fire, is effected and qualified. Raleigh.

White walls make rooms more lightsome than black. Bacon.

Equal posture, and quick spirits, are required to make colours lightsome. Bacon's Natural History.

The sun
His course exalted through the Ram had run, Through Taurus, and the lightsome realms of love. Dryden.

2. Gay; airy; having the power to exhilarate.

It sauteh to sitly with that lightsome affection of joy, wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him. Hooker.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that which now often usurps the name; that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

LIGHTSOMENESS. n. f. [from lightsome.]

1. Luminousness; not opacity; not obscurity; not darknessness.

It is to our atmosphere that the variety of colours, which are painted on the skies, the lightsomeness of our air, and the twilight, are owing. Chapman.

2. Cheerfulness; merriment; levity.

LIOMAS' LOES. n. f. [lignum aloes, Lat.]
Aloes wood.

The aloes spread forth as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of figs which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters. Nam.

LIGNEOUS. adj. [ligneus, Lat. ligneus, Fr.]

Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.

It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more lignuous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon's Natural History.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn: now the covers, and the true body of each seed, the parenchymous and lignuous part of it, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define. Grew.

LIGNUMVITA. n. f. [Lat.] Guaiacum; a very hard wood.

LAPID. n. f. A precious stone.

The third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst. Ezodus.

LIKE. adj. [lic, Saxon; liik, Dutch.]

1. Resembling; having resemblance.

Whom art thou like in thy greatness? Ezekiel.
His son, or one of his illustrious sons,
How like the former, and almost the same! Dryd.

As the earth was designed for the being of men, why might not all other planets be created for the like uses, each for their own inhabitants? Bentley.
This plan, as laid down by him, looks like an universal art than a distinct logic. Baker.

2. Equal; of the same quantity.

More clergymen were impoverished by the late war, than ever in the like space before. Spratt.

3. [for likely.] Probable; credible.

The trials were made, and it is like that the experiment would have been effectual. Bacon.

4. Likely; in a state that gives probable expectations. This is, I think, an improper, though frequent use.

If the duke continues these favours towards you, you are like to be much advanced. Shakspere.
He is like to die for hunger, for there is no more bread. Jeremiah.

The yearly value thereof is already increased double of that it was within these few years, and in like daily to rise higher till it amount to the price of our land in England. Davies.

Hopton resolved to visit Waller's quarters, that he might judge whether he were like to pursue his purpose. Clarendon.

Many were not easy to be governed, nor like to conform themselves to strict rules. Clarendon.

If his rules of reason be not better suited to the mind than his rules for health are fitted to our bodies, he is not like to be much followed. Baker.

LIKE. n. f. [This substantive is seldom more than the adjective used elliptically; the like for the like thing, or like person.]

1. Some person or thing resembling another.

He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again. Shakspere.

Every like is not the same. O Cesar! Shaksp.

Though there have been greater fleets for number, yet for the bulk of the ships never the like. Bacon's War with Spain.

Albeit an eagle did bear away a lamb in her talons, yet a raven endeavouring to do the like was held entangled. Hayward.

One offers, and in offering makes a stay;

Another forward sets, and doth no more;

A third the like. Daniel's Civil War.

His desire

By conversation with his like to help,
Or solace his defects. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Two likes may be mistaken. L'Estrange.

Sho'd study to reform the men,
Or add some grains of folly more

To women than they had before;

This might their natural fancy strike,
Since every being loves its like. Swift.

2. Used with had; near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just: perhaps had is a corruption for was.

Report being carried from one to another in my ship, had like to have been my interthrow. Raleigh.

LIKE. adv.

1. In the same manner; in the same manner as: it is not always easy to determine whether it be an adverb or adjective.

The joyous nymphs, and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
Now hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went. Spenser.

Like as a father pities this children, to the Lord pities them that fear him. Psalms.

Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful? Is this to be the-minded with Christ, who was meek and lowly? Tillotson.

What will be the consequence when he sees me neglected, and forsaken like himself? Shaksp.

They roar'd like lions caught in toils, and end'd

The man knew what they meant who heretofore

Had seen the like he murd'ers'd on the shore. Waller.

2. In such a manner as befits.

Be strong, and quit yourselves like men! 1 Samuel.

3. Likely; probably. A popular use not analogical.

I like the work well; as it be demanded,

As like enough it will, I'd have it copied. Shaksp.

To like. v. a. [lican, Sax. liken, Dut.]

1. To choose with some degree of preference.

As nothing can be so reasonably spoken as to content all men, so this speech was not of them all liked. Knotts.

He gave such an account as made it appear that he liked the design. Clarendon.

We like our present circumstances well, and dream of no change. Atterbury.

2. To approve; to view with approbation, not fondness.

Though they did not like the evil he did, yet they liked him that did the evil. Sidney.

He grew content to mark their speeches, then to marvel at such wit in shopkeepers, after to like their company. Sidney.

He proceeded from looking to liking, and from liking to loving. Sidney.

For several virtues

I have lik'd several women; never any With so full soul. Shakspere's Tempest.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand

Than to drive liking to the pains of love. Shaksp.

Scarcely any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself. South.

Beasts can like, but not distinguish too,

Nor their own liking by reflection know. Dryden.

3. To please; to be agreeable to. Now disused.

Well hoped he, ere long that hardy guest,
If ever covetous hand, or insatiable eye,
Or lips he laid on thing that lik'd him best,
Should be his prey. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Say, my fair brother now, if this device
Do like you, or may you to like entice. Hubbard.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it lik'd her to include the same within one entire leaf. Bacon.

He shall dwell where it liketh him best. Dent.

There let them learn, as likes them, to despise

God and Messiah. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To like. v. n.

1. To be pleased with; with of before the thing approved. Obsolete.

Of any thing more than of God they could not by any means like, as long as whatsoever they knew besides God, they apprehended it not in itself without dependency upon God. Hooker.

The young soldiers did with such cheerfulness like of this resolution, that they thought two days a long delay. Knotts.

2. To choose; to list; to be pleased.

The man likes not to take his brother's wife. Dent.

He that has the prison doors set open imperfectly at liberty, because he may either go or stay, as he best likes. Locke.

LIKELIHOOD. } n. f. [from likely.]

LIKELINESS.

1. Appearance; show. Obsolete.

What of his heart perceive you in his face,
By any likelihood he would to-day?
—that with no man here he is offended. Shaksp.

2. Resemblance; likeness. Obsolete.

The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of antique Rome,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Caesar in.
As by a law, but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
How many would the peaceful city quit
To welcome him? Shakspere's Henry v.

There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation. Haleigh.

3. Probability; verisimilitude; appearance of truth.

As it noteth one such to have been in that age, so had there been more, it would by likelihood as well have noted many. Hooker.

Many of likelihood informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdoubt. Shakspere.

I never yet did hurt,
To lay down likelihood, and forms of hope. Shaksp.

As there is no likelihood that the place could be so altered, so there is no probability that these rivers were turned out of their courses. Haleigh.

Where things are least to be put to the venture, as the eternal interests of the other world ought to be;
there every, even the least, probability, or likelihood of danger, should be provided against. South.

There are predictions of our Saviour recorded by the evangelists, which were not completed till after their death, and had no likelihood of being so when they were pronounced by our blessed Saviour. Aad.

Thus, in all likelihood, would it be with a libertine, who should have a visit from the other world:
the first horror it raised would go off, as new diversions come on. Atterbury.

LIKELY. adj. [from like.]

1. Such as may be liked; such as may please. Obsolete.

These young companions make themselves believe they love at the first look of a likely beauty. Sidm.

St. John, they are your likely men; I would have you served with the best. Shakspere.

2. Probable; such as may in reason be thought or believed; such as may be thought more reasonably than the contrary: as, a likely story, that is, a credible story.

LIKELY. adv. Probably; as may reasonably be thought.

While man was innocent, he was likely ignorant of nothing that imported him to know. Glanville.

TO LIKEN. v. a. [from like.] To represent as having resemblance; to compare.

The prince broke your head for likening him to a fuging man of Windsor. Shakspere's Henry iv.

For who, though with the tongue
Of angels, can relate; or to what things
Taken on earth conspicuous, that may lift
Human imagination to such height
Of God-like power? Milton's Paradise Lost.

LIKENESS. n. f. [from like.]

1. Resemblance; similitude.

They all do live, and moved are
To multiply the likeness of their kind. Spenser.

A transfiguration to make his author appear as charming as he can, provided he maintains his character, and make him not unlike himself. Transfiguration is a kind of drawing after the life, where this is a double sort of likeness, a good one, and a bad one. Dryden.

There will be found a better likeness, and a worse;
and the better is continually to be chosen. Dryden.

2. Form; appearance.

Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain. Shakspere.

It is safer to stand upon our guard against an enemy in the likeness of a friend, than to embrace any man for a friend in the likeness of an enemy. L'Estrange.

3. One who resembles another; a copy; a counterpart.

Poor Cupid, fubbing, scarce could speak.
Indeed, mamma, I do not know, ye:
Alas! how easy my mistake!

I took you for your likeness Cloe. Prim.

LI'KSWISS. adv. [like and with.] In like manner; also; moreover; too.

Jesus said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I likewise will tell you by what authority I do these things. Matthew.

So was it in the decay of the Roman empire, and likewise in the empire of Almaine, after Charles the Great, every bird taking a feather. Bacon.

Spirit of vitriol poured to pure unmix'd serum, conglutates as if it had been boiled. Spirit of sea-salt makes a perfect conglutination of the serum likewise, but with some different phenomena. Arbuthnot.

LI'KING. adj. [perhaps because plumpness is agreeable to the sight.] Plump;

in a state of plumpness.

I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink; for why should he see your faces worse liking, than the children which are of your sort? Daniel.

LI'KING. n. f. [from like.]

1. Good state of body; plumpness.

I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I'm in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. Shakspere.

Their young ones are in good liking; they grow up with corn. Job.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lutiness; and, being in good liking, were set on a stall, when exposed to sale, to show the good habit of their body. Dryden's Notes to Pers.

2. State of trial.

The royal soul, that, like the lab'ring moon,
By charms of art was hurried down;
Forced with regret to leave her native sphere,
Came but a while on liking here. Dryden.

3. Inclination.

Why do you longer feed on loathed light,
Or liking find to gaze on earthly maid? F. Queen.

LI'KING. n. f. [from the verb.] Delight in; pleasure in; with to.

There are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write; and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring of the parts. Dryden.

LI'LACH. n. f. [lilac, lilds Fr.] A tree.

The white thorn is in leaf, and the lilach tree.

Bacon.

LI'LIED. adj. [from lily.] Embellished with lilies.

Nymphs and shepherds dance no more
By sandy Lodon's lily'd banks. Milton.

LILY. n. f. [lilium, Latin.]

There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, and marigolds of various sorts. Miller.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them;
He would not then have touch'd them for his life!

Shakspere.

Shakspere'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
Almost no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakspere.

Arno, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce. Peacocks.

Take but the humblest lily of the field;
And if our pride will to our reason yield,
It must by force comparison be shown,
That on the regal seat great David's son,
Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r, Shines with less glory than that humble flower. Pope.

LILY-DAFFODIL. n. f. [lilio-narcissus.] A foreign flower.

LILY-HYACINTH. n. f. [lilio-hyacinthus.]

A high, a shy flower, composed of six leaves shaped like the flower of hyacinth; the leaves are fleshy, and shaped like those of the lily. There are three species of this plant; one with a blue flower, another white, and a third red. Miller.

LILY of the Valley, or May lily. n. f.
[lilium convallium.]

The flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a bell, and divided at the top into six segments; the ovary becomes a soft globular fruit, containing several round seeds. It is very common in shady woods. Miller.

Lily of the valley has a strong root that runs into the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LILY-LIVER. adj. [lily and liver.] Whitelivered; cowardly.

1. A member; a jointed or articulated part of animals.

A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong knit limbs.

Shakspere.

Oh! that I had been here, to tear her limb meat!
Now am I come each limb to survey, Shakspere.

If thy appearance answer loud report! Milton.

2. [limb, Fr. limbus, Lat.] An edge; a border; a philosophical word.

By moving the prism about, the colours again emerged out of the white net, the violet and the blue at its inward limb, and at the outward limb
the red and yellow. Newton.

TO LIMB. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with limbs.

As they please,
They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size
Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare. Milt.

2. To tear asunder; to dismember.

LI'MBECK. n. f. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from alembick.] A still.

Her cheeks, on which this streaming nectar fell,
Still'd through the limbeck of her diamond eyes. Felistras.

Fires of Spain, and the line,
Whose countries limbecks upon bodies be,
Canst thou for gun bear? Donne.

Call up, unbound,
In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,
Prun'd through a limbeck to this naked form. Milt.

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Howell.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbecks rise,
It would in richer showers descend again. Dryden.

The warm limbeck draws Salutious waters from the noontide brood. Philips.

LI'MBER. adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.

A fleet of five years' age, large limb'd, and fed,
To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led. Pope.

LI'MBER. adj. Flexible; easily bent; pli-ant; lithe.

You put me off with limber vows. Shakspere.

I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state, Edward Atheling could subsist, being the indubitate heir of the Saxon line; but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear. Watson.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Mouse, or worm: those wad'd their limber tails
For wings; and smallest lineaments exact.

In all the livens deck'd of summer's pride. Milt.

She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long tot limber ears to defend her. Moor.

The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the oesophagus, very limber. Ray on Creation.

LI'MBERNESS. n. f. [from limber.] Flexibility; pliancy.

Limbo. v. f. [Ex quo sit limbus inferorum. Du Cange.]

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Populantly hell.

No, he is in tarter limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel.

Shakespeare.

Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss.

Sardus.

All these up which I do
Fly o'er the battlements of the world far off,
Into a limbo large, and broad, sing call'd
The paradise of fools.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Any place of misery and constraint.

For he no longer was at large;
But Vivia straight brought on the charge;
And in the felt came limbo put.

Hudibras.

The knight and squire, where he was shut,
Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am Left in limbo.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Lim. n. f. [lim, gelyman, Sax. to glue.]

1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.

Poor bird I thou'lt never far the net or lime,

The pitfall, nor the gin.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires,

By wailful songs, whose compell'd rhymes
Should be full fraught with servicable vows.

Shakespeare.

Then are new-bewaid maidens, he throws,
Like nets or lime twigs, where'er he goes,

His title of baron on every wench.

Dante.

A thrush was taken with a bush of lime twigs.

L'Estrange.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,

And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround.

Dryden.

Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts,
Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows' hearts.

Pope.

2. Matter of which mortar is made: so called because used in cement.

There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone.

Hill's Materia Medica.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen praise'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
But all admire Inigo Jones.

Swift.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold.

Mortimer.

3. The linden tree. [linb, Sux. tilia, Lat.]

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the stalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes articulated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue found many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Browne mentions one in Norfolk sixteen yards in circuit.

Miller.

For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
For her the lilies hung their heads, and die.

4. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend.

Thomson.

To LIMB. v. a. [from lim.]

1. To entangle; to ensnare.

O bosom, black as death!
Q' lined soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged.

Shakespeare.

Example, that so terribly shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, diffuse succour, but that they are limb'd with the twigs that threaten them.

The bird that hath been limb'd in a bush,
With trembling wings misdotheth every bush,
And I, the hapless snail to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye.

Where my poor young was limb'd, was caught, and kill'd.

2. To smear with lime.

Myself have limb'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays.

Those twigs in time will come to be limb'd,
And then you are all lost if you do but touch them.

3. To cement. This sense is out of use.

I will not ruin my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster.

4. To manure ground with lime.

Encouragement that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming.

All sorts of pease love limb'd or marled land.

Mortimer.

Lim. n. f. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

The counter gate is as hateful to me, as the neck of a lime-kiln.

They were found in a lime-kiln, and having puff'd the fire, each is a little vitriol.

Woodward.

Lim. n. f. [lime and stone.] The stone of which lime is made.

Fire stone and lime stone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage.

Mortimer.

Lime-water. n. f.

Lime-water, made by pouring water upon quick-lime, with some other ingredients to take off its ill flavour, is of great service internally in all cutaneous eruptions, and diseases of the lungs.

He tried an experiment on wheat infused in lime-water alone, and some in brandy and lime-water mixed, and had from each grain a great increase.

Mortimer.

Lim. n. f. [limit, French; limitor, Lat.] Bound; border; utmost reach.

The whole limit of the mountain round about shall be most holy.

We went, great emperor, by thy command,
To view the utmost limits of the land;
Ev'n to the place where no more world is found,
But frowning billows beating on the ground.

To LIMIT. v. a. [limiter, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To confine within certain bounds; to restrain; to circumscribe; not to leave at large.

They tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel.

Thanks I must you owe, that you are thence protect; for there is boundless theft in limited professions.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch.

2. To restrain from a lax or general signification; as, the universe is here limited to this earth.

LIMITAREOUS. adj. [from limit.] Belonging to the bounds.

LIMITARY. adj. [from limit.] Placed at the boundaries as a guard or superintendent.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains,
Proud limitary cherub!

Milton.

LIMITATION. n. f. [limitation, Fr. limitation, Lat.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof.

Am I young?

But, as it were, in sort of limitation?

I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir.

This limitation, indeed, of our authors, will save the

the labour, who would look for him among the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men.

If a king limits by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; if he limits by constitution, he becomes immediately king de jure.

2. Confinement from a lax or undetermined import.

The cause of error is ignorance, what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable.

Lim. n. f. A mongrel.

To LIMIN. v. a. [coliminer, Fr. to adorn books with pictures.] To draw; to paint any thing.

Mine eyes doth his effigies witness,
Most truly limin'd, and living in your face.

How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limin'd in their unaffected beauty?

Lim. n. f. [corrupted from coliminer, a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers liminers at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so unerringly, according to the idea of its kind.

Poets are liminers of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;

Words are the paint by which their thoughts are And nature is their object to be drawn.

Lim. adj. [limofus, Latin.] Muddy; slony.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees unto a firm land.

The chub eats waterish, and the flesh of him is not firm, limp, and talkative.

2. It is used in some provinces, and in Scotland, for limber, flexible.

To LIMP. v. n. [limpen, Saxon.] To halt; to walk lamely.

An old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step
Limp'd in pure love.

Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping fire.

How far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow in underprising it; so far this shadow doth limp behind the substance.

When Plutus, with his riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot.

Limping death, last'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.

The limping smith observ'd the sudden'd feast,
And hopping here and there put in his word.

Can syllogism set things right?
No: majors soon with minors fight;
Or both in friendly comfort join'd,
The consequence limps false behind.

Lim. n. f. A kind of shellfish.

Lim. adj. [limpide, Fr. limpidus, Lat.]

Clear; pure; transparent.

The springs which were clear, fresh, and limpid, become thick and turbid, and impregnated with sulphur as long as the earthquake lasts.

The brook that purls along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Gently diffus'd into a limpid plain.

Lim. n. f. [from limpid.] Clearness; purity.

Lim. adv. [from limp.] In a lame halting manner.

LINE. adj. [from line.]

round,

One a hard oak, a softer linden one. Dryden.

LINE. n. f. [linea, Latin.]

1. Longitudinal extension.

Even the planets, upon this principle, must gravitate no more towards the sun; so that they would not revolve in curve lines, but fly away in direct tangents, till they struck against other planets. Bentley.

2. A slender string.

Well sung the Roman bard; all human things,
Of dearest value, hang on slender strings;
To see the then sole hope, and in design

Of heav'n our joy, supported by a line. Waller.
A line seldom holds to strain, or draws straight in length, above fifty or sixty feet. Mozon.

3. A thread extended to direct any operations.

We as by line upon the ocean go,
Whose paths shall be familiar as the land. Dryden.
The string that sustains the angler's hook.

Victorious with their lines and eyes,
They make the fishes and the men their prize. Waller.

4. Lineaments, or marks in the hand or face.

Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of favour
Which then he wore. Shakespeare.

I shall have good fortune; go to, here's a simple line of life; here's a small tribe of wives. Shaksp.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystic figures of her hand,
He tips the palmistry, and dines

On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleveland.

5. Delineation; sketch.

You have generous thoughts turned to such speculations: but this is not enough towards the rising such buildings as I have drawn you here the lines of, unless the direction of all affairs here were wholly in your hands. Temple.

The inventors meant to turn such qualifications into persons as were agreeable to his character, from whom the line was drawn. Pope.

6. Contour; outline.

Oh lasting as those colours may they shine,
Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line! Pope.

Then one long night continued darkness joins.
Creech.

14. Progeny; family, ascending or descending.

He chid the sisters
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then prophet like,
They had'd him father to a line of kings. Shaksp.

He sends you this most memorable line,
In ev'ry branch truly demonstrative,
Willing you overlook this pedigree. Shakspere.

Some lines were noted for a stern, rigid virtue,
Savage, haughty, partitionous and unpopular;
Others were sweet and affable. Dryden.

His empire, courage, and his boasted line,
Were all prov'd mortal. Ruscommon.

A golden bowl
The queen commanded to be crown'd with wine,
The bowl that Belus us'd, and all the Tynan line.

Spenser.

Joseph was of the house and lineage of David. Luke.
The Tirlan cometh forth with all his generation or lineage, the males before him, and females following him; and if there be a woman from whose body

the whole lineage is descended, there is a traverse where the street, Baron.

Men of mighty fame,
And from th' immortal gods their lineage came. Dry-

No longer shall the widow'd land bemoan
A broken lineage, and a doubtful throne,
But boast her royal progeny's increase.

And count the pledges of her future peace. Addis.
This care was infused by God himself, in order to ascertain the descent of the Messiah, and to prove that he was, as the prophets had foretold, of the tribe of Judah, and of the lineage of David. Atterbury.

LINEAL. adj. [linealis, from linea, Lat.]

1. Composed of lines; delineat'd.

When any thing is mathematically demonstrated weak, it is much more mechanically weak; errors ever occurring more easily in the management of gross materials than lineal designs. Watson.

2. Descending in a direct genealogy.

To re-establish, de facto, the right of lineal succession to paternal government, is to put a man in possession of that government which his fathers did enjoy, and he by lineal succession had a right to. Locke.

3. Hereditary; derived from ancestors.

Peace be to France, if France in peace permit
Our just and lineal entrance to our own. Shaksp.

4. Allied by direct descent.

Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the lady Ermenegere. Shakspere.
O that your brows my laurel had sustain'd!
Well had I been depos'd if you had reign'd:
The father had descended for the son;
For only you are lineal to the throne. Dryden.

LINEALLY. adv. [from lineal] In a direct line.

If he had been the person upon whom the crown had lineally and rightfully descended, it was a good law. Clarendon.

LINEAMENT. n. f. [lineament, Fr. linea- mentum, Lat.] Feature; discriminating mark in the form.

Noble York
Found that the issue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke, my father. Shakspere.

Six wings he wore, to shade
His lineaments divine. Milton.

Man he seems
In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine. Milton.

There are not more differences in men's faces, and the outward lineaments of their bodies, than there are in the natures and tempers of their minds; only there is this difference, that the distinguishing characters of the face, and the lineaments of the body, grow more plain with time, but the peculiar physiognomy of the mind is most discernible in children. Locke.

I may advance religion and morals, by tracing some few lineaments in the character of a lady, who hath spent all her life in the practice of both. Swift.

The utmost force of boiling water is not able to destroy the structure of the tenderest plant: the lineaments of a white lily will remain after the strongest decoction. Arbuthnot.

LINEAR. adj. [linearis, Lat.] Composed of lines; having the form of lines.

Wherever it is freed from the sand stone, it is

Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whey-face?
Shakespeare.

LIVEN-DRA'PER. n. f. [liven and draper.]
He who deals in linen.

LING. n. f. [ling, Islandick.]

1. Heath. This sense is retained in the northern counties; yet Bacon seems to distinguish them.

Heath, and ling, and sedges. Bacon.

2. [linghe, Dutch.] A kind of sea fish.
When harvest is ended, take shipping, or ride,
Ling, salt fish, and herring, for Lent to provide.

Our English bring from thence good store of fish, but especially our deepest and thickest ling, which are therefore called island lings. Abbot.

LING. The termination notes commonly diminution; as, kitling, and is derived from klein, German, little: sometimes a quality; as, firstling, in which sense
Skinner deduces it from tangen, old Teutonic, to belong.

To LINGER. v. n. [from leng, Sax. long.]

1. To remain long in languor and pain.

Like wretches, that have linger'd long.

We'll snatch the strongest cordial of our love. Dry.

Better to rush at once to shades below,
Than linger life away, and nourish woe. Pope.

2. To hesitate; to be in suspense.

Perhaps thou ling'st, in deep thoughts detain'd
Of th' enterprise so hazardous and high.

Paradisi Regained.

3. To remain long. In an ill sense.

Let order die,
And let this world no longer be a stage

To feed contention in a ling'ring act. Shakespeare.

Ye brethren of the lyre, and tuneful voice,
Lament his lot; but at your own rejoice.

Now live secure, and linger out your days;
The gods are pleas'd alone with Purcell's lays. Dry.

Your very fear of death shall make ye try
To catch the shade of immortality;

Wishing on earth to linger, and to save Part of its prey from the devouring grave. Prior.

4. To remain long without any action or determination.

We have lingered about a match between Anne Pope and my cousin Slender, and this day we shall have our answer. Shakespeare.

5. To wait long in expectation or uncertainty.

I must solicit
All his concerns as mine:

And if my eyes have pow'r, he should not sue
In vain, nor linger with a long delay. Dryden.

6. To be long in producing effect.

Who doth think, he hath strange ling'ring poisons.
Shakespeare.

To LINGER. v. a. To protract; to draw out to length. Out of use.

I can get no remedy against this consumption of the pulse. Porro sing only lingers and lingers A, out, but the disease is incurable. Shakespeare.

She ling is my desires. Shakespeare.

Let your brief plagues be mercy,
And linger not our fire destruction on. Shaksp.

LINGERER. n. f. [from linger.] One who lingers.

LINGERINGLY. adv. [from lingering.]

With delay; tardily.

Of poisons, some kill more gently and lingeringly, others more violently and speedily, yet both kill. Hale.

LINGET. n. f. [from linguet; lingot, Fr.]

A small mass of metal.

Other matter hath been used for money, as among the Lacedaemonians, iron linguets quenched with vinegar, that they may serve to no other use. Cumt.

LINGO. n. f. [Portuguese.] Language;

LINGUADENTAL. adj. [lingua and dens.
Lat.] Uttered by the joint action of the tongue and teeth.

The linguadental, f. v., as also the linguadental,
th. dh, he will soon learn. Holder.

LINGUIST. n. f. [from lingua, Lat.] A man skilful in languages.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet, if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man, as any yeoman or tradesman competently wise in his mother dialect only. Milton.

Our linguist received extraordinary rudiments towards a good education. Spectator.

LINGWORT. n. f. An herb.

LINIMENT. n. f. [liniment, Fr. linimentum,
Lat.] Ointment; balsam; unguent.

The nostrils, and the jugular arteries, ought to be anointed every morning with this liniment or balsam. Harvey.

The wife author of nature hath provided on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment or liniment, fit for the anointment of the feathers. Ray.

LINING. n. f. [from line.]

1. The inner covering of any thing; the inner double of a garment.

Was I deceived, or did a subtle cloud
Turn forth her silver lining on the night? Milton.

The fold in the grille of the nose is covered with a lining, which differs from the facing of the tongue. Grew.

The gown with stiff embrod'ry shining,
Looks charming with a lighter lining. Prior.

2. That which is within.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. Shaksp.

LINK. n. f. [gelencke, German.]

1. A single ring of a chain.

The Roman state, whose course will yet go on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong links asunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment. Shakespeare.

The moral of that poetical fiction, that the uppermost link of all the series of subordinate causes is fastened to Jupiter's chair, signifies an useful truth. Hale.

Trunks hang together in a chain of mutual dependance; you cannot draw one link without attracting others. Glennville.

While she does her upward flight sustain,
Touching each link of the continued chain,
At length she is oblig'd and forc'd to see
A first, a source, a life, a deity. Prior.

2. Any thing doubled and closed together.

Make a link of hoise hair very strong, and fasten it to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer.

3. A chain; any thing connecting.

Nor rattle's dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.

I feel
The link of nature draw me; flesh of flesh, Bone of my bone thou art. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fire, blood and earth, and air, by this were bound,
And love, the common link, the new creation crown'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

4. Any single part of a series or chain of consequences; a graduation in ratiocination; a proposition joined to a foregoing and following proposition.

The thread and train of consequences in intellective ratiocination is often long, and chained together by divers links, which cannot be done in imaginative ratiocination by some attributed to brutes. Hale.

5. A series; this sense is improper. Addison has used link for chain.

Though I have here only chosen this single link of matters, I might find out others among those names which are still extant, that delivered down this account of our Saviour in a successive gradation. Addy.

L I N

6. [from lynx.] A torch made of pitch and hards.

O, thou art an everlasting bonfire light; thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt taverns and taverns. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a faliginous link of lies.
Howel.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he fails behind his link. Dryden.

One that bore a link

On a sudden clapp'd his flaming cudgel,
Like linkstock, to the horse's touch-hole. Hudibras.

7. Perhaps in the following passage it may mean lampblack.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat. Shaksp.

To LINK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate; as, the links of a chain.

Descending tread us down,
Thus drooping; we with linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton.

Against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs;
Murried to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting fold may pierce
In notes, with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out. Milton.

2. To unite; to conjoin in concord.

They're so linked in friendship,

That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter. Shakespeare.

3. To join; to connect.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
Inclose whole downs in walls, 'tis all a joke. Pope.

So from the first eternal order ran,
And creature link'd to creature, man to man. Pope.

4. To join by confederacy or contract.

They make an offer of themselves into the service of that enemy, with whose servants they link themselves in so near a bond. Hooker.

Be advised for the best,
Ere thou thy daughter link in holy band
Of wedlock, to that new unknown guest. F. Queen.

Blood in princes link'd not in such fort,
As that it is of any pow'r to tye. Daniel.

Out of despair; joy, but with fear yet link'd. Milton.

God has links our hopes and our duty together.

Decay of Piety.

So gracious hath God been to us, as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very things the instances of our obedience, which are the natural means and causes of our happiness. Tillotson.

6. To unite or concatenate in a regular series of consequences.

These things are linked, and, as it were, chained one to another: we labour to eat, and we cut to live, and we live to do good; and the good which we do is sown down, with reference unto a future harvest. Hooker.

Tell me, which part it does necessitate?

I'll chuse the other: there I'll link th' effect;

A chain, which fools to catch themselves project!

Dryden.

By which chain of ideas thus visibly linked together in train, i. e. each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two it is immediately placed between, the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

LINKBOY. n. f. [link and boy.] A boy

LINKMAN. n. f. that carries a torch to accommodate passengers with light.

What a ridiculous thing it was, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous disclusions of light, to prevent the officiousness of the linkboy. More.

Though thou art tempted by the linkman's call,
Yet trust him not along the lonely wall. Guy.

In the black form of cinder-wench the came.

Lizard's leg, and owl's wing. Shakspere.

LI'ARDSTONE. n. f. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

LI'ARDSTALL. n. f. A plant.
LI'ARD (legum.) doctor. A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo. interj. [In Sax.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recal' the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakspere.
Now must the world point at poor Catherine,
And say, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife. Shak.

*Lo! I have a weapon,
A better never did itself sustain Upon a soldier's thigh.* Shakspere.
Thou dost utter,
I am yours for ever.

Why to you now, I've spoke to the purpose. Shakspere.
For lo! he sung the world's stupendous birth. Rejkommen.

*Lo! heav'n and earth combine
To bless our bold design.* Dryden's Albion.

LOACH. n. f. [Loche, Fr.]
The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is fitable to that length; he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of warts like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots: his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gelfin, and other physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a small worm, at the bottom, for he seldom rises above the gravel. Walton's Angler.

LOAD. n. f. [blabe, Sax.]

1. A burden; a freight; lading.
A fair plant with fruit furchard'd,
Deigns gone to ease thy load, and taste thy sweet. Milton.

Then on his back he laid the precious load.
And sought his wonted shelter. Dryden.
Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the halmey tree;
White by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms command which these trees adorn. Pope.

2. Weight; pressure; encumbrance.
Jove lighten'd of its load

Th' enormous mass, the labour of a god. Pope.

3. Weight, or violence of blows.
Like lion mov'd they laid on load,
And made a cruel fight. Chery Chace.

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
From my prevailing arm. Milton.
And Menebous laid hard load upon his helm. Dryden.

4. Any thing that depresses.
How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant. Ray.

5. As much drink as one can bear.
There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. L'Estrange.

The thundering god,
Ev'n he withdrew to rest, and had his load. Dryd.

To LOAD. v. a. preterit loaded; par. loaden or laden. [hlaban, Sax.]

1. To burden; to freight.
At last, laden with honour's spoils, Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shaksp.

Your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the land. Quia.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.
He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others. Lee.

3. To charge a gun.
A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading
it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wifman.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, loaden with death, still sounds
In my stunn'd ears. Addison's Cato.

LOAD. n. f. [more properly lode, as it was anciently written; from leban, Sax. to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay conched at first in certain strikes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Their manner of working in the lead mines, is to follow the load as it lieth. Carew.

LO'ADER. n. f. [from load.] He who loads.

LO'ADSMAN. n. f. [load or lode and man.]
He who leads the way; a pilot.

LO'ADSTAR. n. f. [more properly as it is in Munderville, lodestar, from leban, to lead.] The polestar; theynosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes: she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow. Sidney.

My helice, the loadstar of my life. Spenser.
O happy star!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air!
More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear. Shakspere.

That clear majesty
Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth, Lodestone to hearts, and lodestar to all eyes. Davies.

LO'ADSTONE. n. f. [properly lodestone or lodging-stone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariners compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron gray where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour; it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal. Hill.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Swift.

LOAF. n. f. [from hlaf or lap, Sax.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Early it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive we know. Shakspere.

The bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days, hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a-day. Hayward.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Digby.

2. Any thick mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle
it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle. Mort.

LOAM. n. f. [*lim, laam, Sax. limus, Lat.
from lym, a fen, Junius.*] Fat, unctuous, tenacious earth; marl.

The purist treasure
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam or painted clay. Shaksp.

Alexander retumeth to dust the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a better jugal? Shakspere.

To LOAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

The joint ends and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar. Milton.

LOAMY. adj. [from loam.] Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, if it be not loamy and binding. Bacon.

Auricle seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded. Evelyn.

LOAN. n. f. [hlam, Sax.] Any thing lent;
any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues shall be paid,
the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteens, and loans. Bacon.

You're on the fret;
Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,
Thy friend and old acquaintance deers disown
The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan. Dry.

LOATH. adj. [lað, Sax.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready; not inclined.

These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loth to leave the company of so many things united in perfection! Sidney.

With lofty eyes; half loth to look so low,
She thanked them in her disdainful wife,
No other grace vouchsafed them to show
Of prince's worthy. Spenser.

When he heard her answers loth he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distress. Spenser.

To speak so indirectly, I am loth;
I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part. Shakspere.

Long doth he stay, as loth to leave the land,
From whose soft side the first doth issue make;
She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,
Her flow'ry banks unwilling to forsake. Davies.

Then wilt thou not be loth
To leave this paradise, but shalt possess
A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton.

To pardon willing, and to punish loth;
You strike with one hand, but you heal with both.
Lamenting all that prostrate lie, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live. Waller.

When Aeneas is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shows him compassionate, and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature. Dryden.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,
First views the torrent he would venture o'er;
And then his inn upon the farther ground,
Loth to wade through, and loth to go round:
Then dipping in his staff doth trial make How deep it is; and, sighing, pulls it back. Dry.

I know you thy to be oblig'd;
And still more loth to be oblig'd by me. Southerne.

To LOATH. v. a. [from loath.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.
Parthenia had learned both liking and misliking, loving and loathing. Sidney.

They with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness. Spenser.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,
Not to reveal the secret which I loath. Waller.

For the lion loaths the taste of blood,
And roaring hunts his female through the wood. Dryden.

Now his exalted spirit loaths
Incumbrances of food and cloathes. Swift.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety.
Loathing the honey'd cakes, I long'd for bread. Cowley.

Our appetite is extinguished with the satisfaction, and is succeeded by loathing and satiety. Hogers.

3. To feel food with dislike.
Loathing is a symptom known to attend disorders of the stomach; the cure must have regard to the cause. Quincy.

To LOATHE. v. n.

1. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence.
Obsolete.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grifty toadfoot grown there might I see,
And loathing paddocks lording on the same. Spensf.

2. To feel abhorrence or disgust.
The fish in the river shall die, and the river sink; and the Egyptians shall loath to drink of the water. Ezraus.

Why do I long within this hated place,
Where every object shocks my loathing eyes? Ross.

LOATHED. n. f. [from loath.] One that loathes.

LOATHFUL. adj. [loath and full.]

1. Abhorring; hating.
Which he did with loathful eyes behold,
He would no more endure. Hamlet.

With murderous ravin. Spenser.

The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.

Sour-eyed disdain, and discord, shall bestow
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it. Shakespeare.

LOATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though loathly, must needs give place unto them. Sidney.

Loathly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose. Shakespeare.

This shows that you from nature loathly stray,
That suffer not an artificial day. Donne.

LOATHWESS. n. f. [from loath.] Unwillingness.

The fair soul herself
Weigh'd between loathness and obedience,
Which end the beam should bow. Shakespeare.

Should we be taking leave,
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The loathness to depart would grow. Shakespeare.

After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and loathness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Bacon.

LOATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]

1. Abhorred; detestable.

The fresh young fly
Did much disdain to subject his desire
To loathsomeness sloth, or hours in ease to waste. Spenser.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsomeness sickness. Milton.

If we consider man in such a loathsomeness and provoking condition, was it not long enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being? South.

2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.

The sweetest honey
Is loathsomeness in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakespeare.

LOATHSOMENESS. n. f. [from loathsomeness.] Quality of raising hatred, disgust, or abhorrence.

The catcombs must have been full of flesh and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.

LOAVES, plural of loaf.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odors till a feast was past. Bacon.

Shakespeare.

LOBBY. n. f. [lobbe, German.] An opening before a room.

His lobbies fill with tendance,
Rain sacrificial whiff-rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakespeare.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Watson.

Try your backfairs, and let the lobby wait,
A stratagem in war is no deceit. King.

LOBE. n. f. [lobe, Fr. lobé.] A division; a distinct part: used commonly for a part of the lungs.

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass, for their eternal ment.
Dryden.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs. Arbutnot.

From whence the quick reciprocating breath,
The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death. Swet.

LOBSTER. n. f. [lobstee, Sax.] A crus-taceous fish.

Those that cast their shells, are the lobster, the crab, and craw fish. Bacon.

claw of one side longer than the other. Brown.

LOCAL. adj. [local, Fr. locus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of place.

By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hooker.

A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
Leaving material world and local skies. Prior.

2. Relating to place.

The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other. Hooker.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipping, supposing that circumstance changed. Stillington.

3. Being in a particular place.

Dream not of their fight,
As of a duel, or of the local wounds
Of head, or heel. Milton.

How is the change of being sometimes here,
sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum,
without a change in the body moved? Digby.

LOCALITY. n. f. [from local.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned. Hume.

LOCALLY. adv. [from local.] With respect to place.

Whether things, in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not lo- cally distant, I leave to the readers. Glanville.

LOCATION. n. f. [locatio, Lat.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing;

state of being placed.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

LOCH. n. f. A lake. Scottish.

A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle. Cheyne.

LOCK. n. f. [loc, Sax. in both senses.]

Our former sample in our strong-barr'd gates. Shakespeare.

Then seek to know those things which make us blest,
And having found them, lock them in thy breast. Denham.

The frightened dame
The lock in secret lock'd. Dryden's Ode.

If the door to a council be kept by armed men,
and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out,
the freedom of those within is infringed, and all their acts are as void as if they were locked up. Bay.

One conducts to the poet's completing of his work; the other locks his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle. Dryden.

The father of the gods
Cynthia's tears to thy dark shades,
And lock'd 'em wide withal, oppress'd with moan.
Shakespeare.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less? Locke.

Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep

An animal cannot well be defined from any particular, organized part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks. Ashmole.

LOCUST. n. f. [locusta, Lat.] A devouring insect.

The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known amongst us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Africa, and many places of Asia, that sometimes they fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with. Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned, but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries. Calmét.

To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy count. Exodus.

An replete with the fœvus of animals, rotting, has produced pestilential fevers, such have likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts. A. B.

LOCUST-TREE. n. f.

The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an unisepalous hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungus stringy substance. Miller.

5. To place in the memory.

This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodg'd it, and noted it, in some particular. Bacon.

6. To harbour or cover.

The deer is lodg'd, I've track'd her to her covert; Rush in at once. Addison.

7. To afford place to.

The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time. Cheyne.

8. To lay flat.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down;

Though castles topple on their warders' heads. Shakespeare.

We'll make foul weather with despided tears; Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn, And make a death in this revolting land. Shak.

To LODGE. v. n.

1. To reside; to keep residence.

Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye, And where care lodgeth sleep will never lie. Shak. Something holy lodges in that breast, And with these raptures moves the vocal air To testify his hidden residence. Milton.

And dwells such rage in loftiest bosoms then? And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.

2. To take a temporary habitation.

Why commands the king, That his chief followers lodge in towns about him, While he himself keepeth in the cold field? Shak.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here or he lies there, were to be in mine own throat. Shakespeare.

Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people. Samuel.

3. To take up residence at night.

My lords And soldiers, stay and lodge with me this night. Shakespeare.

Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I may leave my people! Jeremiah.

Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way. Taylor.

4. To lie flat.

Long cone whast they reckon in Oxfordshire bell for rank clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be milled. Mortimer.

LODGE. n. f. [logis, French.]

1. A small house in a park or forest.

He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he calleth his desert, wherein he hath built two fine lodges. Steele.

I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shakespeare.

He and his lady both are at the lodge, Upon the north side of this pleasant chace. Shak.

Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both stood, Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd

The God that made both sky, air, earth. Milton. Whenever I am turned out, my lodge depends upon a low-spirited family. Swift.

2. Any small house appendant to a greater; as, the porter's lodge.

The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting battles, from one end of the year to the other. Addison.

LODGER. n. f. [from lodge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another.

Base tyke, call'st thou me host? now, I scorn the term; nor shall my Nell keep lodgers. Shakespeare.

There were in a family, the men and his wife, three children, and three servants or lodgers. Craunt's Bills.

Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and nasty families. Harvey.

The gentleman begged me to stop; for that a lodger he had taken in was run mad. Tetter.

Sylla was reproached by his fellow lodger that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds one shilling and fivepence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and fourpence halfpenny. Arbuthnot.

2. One that resides in any place.

Look in that breast, most dirty dear; Say, can you find but one such lodger there? Pope.

LODGING. n. f. [from lodge.]

1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin, And let him find it. Shakespeare's Othello.

Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great adman of acquaintance. Bacon.

At night he came To his known lodgings, and his country dame. Dryden.

He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend. Addison's Guardian.

Wits take lodgings in the found of Bow. Pope.

3. Sublime; elevated in sentiment.

He know himself to brag and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.
Proud; haughty.
The eyes of the lofty shall be humbled. Isiah.
Lofty and four to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that fought him, sweet as summer.

Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
A lowly servant, but a lofty mate. Dryden.

LOG, n. s. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from lizzu, Sax. to lie; Junius, from loge, Dutch, sluggish; perhaps the Latin, lignum, is the true original.]

1. A shapeless bulky piece of wood.
Would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that thou'rt injur'd to pile.

The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swim,
An udder drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cub, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin. Calm.

A meat offering mingled with oil, and one log of oil. Leviticus.

LOGARITHMS, n. s. [logarithme, French;
λογος and ἀριθμος.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchiston, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, a civilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, so the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical
one, for instance,

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9
1 2 4 8 16 32 64 128 256 512

Where the numbers above, beginning with (1), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms.
The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by deducting the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and trifling them for the cube, and so on. Harris.

LOGGERS, n. s.

Loggats is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the game which is now called kittle-pins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. Hammer.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them. Shakespeare.

LOGGERHEAD, n. s. [logge, Dut. stupid, and head; or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt;
a blockhead; a thickskull.

Where hast thou been, Hal?

—With three or four loggerheads, amongst three four score hogheads. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other people's fires? Plough.

To fall to LOGGERHEADS. } fight without weapons.

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell so loggerheads which should be his master. L. Strange.

LOGGERHEADEN, adj. [from loggerhead.]
Dull; stupid; doltish.

You loggerheaded unpolish'd groom, what!
no attendance? Shakespeare.

O'GICK, n. s. [logique, Fr. logica, Lat.

from λογος, the art of reasoning. One of the seven sciences.

Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. Watts's Logick.

Talk logick with acquaintance,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk. Shakespeare.

By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. Cleric's son.

Here foam'd rebellious logick, gurg'd and bound,
There slurr'd fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground.
Pope.

LOGICAL, adj. [from logick.]

1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.

The heretick complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. Hooker.
Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. Dryden.

We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical argument; since it would be more perfection not to want them. Baker.

2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick.

A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head. Spectator.

LOGICALLY, adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logick.

How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?

From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either. Prior.

LOGICIAN, n. s. [logicien, Fr. logicians, Lat.] A teacher or professor of logick;
a man versed in logick.

If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great things. Bacon.

It may be believed that logicians man is distinguish'd from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. Addison.

Each staunch polemic stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician full expelling Locke,

Came whip and spur. Pope's Dunciad.

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception. Swift.

The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author.
Baker.

LOGMAN, n. s. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.

For your sake
Am I this patient logman. Shakespeare's Temp.

LOGOMACHY, n. s. [λογμαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words.

Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities, and to transformed her to a mere kind of sophistry and logomachy. Houet.

LOGWOOD, n. s.

Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campechy. Hill's Mat. Med.
To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water. Peachment.

LOGHOCK, n. s.

Loghock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called elegmas, limbatives, or limatics. Quincy.

Loghocks and pectorals were prescribed, and venection repeated. Wijeman's Surgery.

LOIN, n. s. [laign, Welsh.]

1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.

2. Loins; the reins.

My face I'll guine with silk, Blanket my loins. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Thou blunder of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed ille of thy father's loins! Shaksp.

High in the love of Heaven? yet from my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son Of God most high. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A multitude like which the populous north Pour'd never from her frozen womb, to pass
Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the south. Milton.

To LOITER, v. n. [luteru, Dutch.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.

So John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. Shaksp.

Wherever this long delay?

You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away.

Mark how he spends his time, whether he actively loiters it away. Locke.

If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity.

LOITERER, n. s. [from loiter.] A lingerer;
an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a larger to cry;
And daily to loiters have a good eye. Tupper.

The poor, by idleness or unthriftness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiters. Maynard.

Where hast thou been, thou loiterer?

Though my eyes close'd, my arms have still been open'd.

To search it thou wert come. Othway.

Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we live not like idle loiters and truants. Morse.

Each idle loiterer, that attend

No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend. Pope.

To LOLE, v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]

1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.

So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me's to shakes and pulls me. Shakespeare's Othello.

He is not lolling on a few love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare.

Cloze by a softly murm'ring stream,
Where lovers us'd to loll and dream. Hudibras.

To loll on couches, rich with citron sceds,
And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds. Dryd.

Vind of care he lolls supine in state,
And leaves his business to be done by fate. Dryd.

But winton now, and lolling at our ease,
We suffer all the invertebrate ills of peace. Dryden.

A lazy, lolling fort

Of ever idle loiters. Dunciad.

2. To hang out; used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple porter of the Stygian loll,
With lolling tongue lay yawning at thy feet. Dryd.

With harmless play amidst the bowls he lolls it,
And with his lolling tongue assu'd the taste. Dryd.

To LOLE, v. a. To put out; used of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hast thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
To see the people, when I play months they loll,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll d out a foot. Dryden's Persius.

By Strymon's freezing streams he sat alone,
Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs, Fierce tigers couch'd around; and loll'd their fawning tongues. Dryden's Virgil.

LOMP, n. s. A kind of roundish fish.

LONE, adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

Here the lone hour a blank of life displays, Savage.

L O N

Thus vanish foggy, gnomes, and balls,
And leave you in fine woods, or empty walks. Pope.
2. Single; not conjoined or neighbouring to others.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court. Pope.

LO'NELINESS. n. f. [from lonely.]

1. Solitude; want of company.

The huge and fearful assembly grew to him a tedious loneliness, esteeming nobody face. Dai- phnema was lost. Stdney.

2. Disposition to solitude.

I like

The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears head. Shakespeare.

LO'SELY. adj. [from lone.]

1. Solitary.

I go alone.

Like to a lonely dragon; that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shak.

Why thus dost thou up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the miled and lonely traveller? Milton.
Thus has made you note, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell. Dryden.

2. Addicted to solitude.

When, fairest prince,

You lonely thus from the full court retire,
Love and the graces follow to your solitude. Rome.

LO'NESS. n. f. [from lone.] Solitude;
dislike of company.

If of court life you know the good,
You would leave loneliness. Donne.
I can love her who loves loneliness best. Donne.

LO'ESOME. adj. [from lone.] Solitary; dismal.

You either must the earth from rest disluch,
Or roll around the heavens the solar orb,
Else what a dreadful face will nature wear?
How horrid will these loneliness fests appear! Blackm.

LO'NG. adj. [long, Fr. longue, Lat.]

1. Not short: used of time.

He talk'd a long while, even till break of day. Acts.
He was desirous to see him of a long season. Luke.

come up to the mount. Exodus.

The martial Ancus Forbids the rusty sword again. Dryden.

Refusa'd the long-forgotten shield.
One of these advantages, which Corneille has laid down, is the making choice of some signal and long-expected day, whereon the action of the play is to depend. Dryden.

So stood the pious prince immov'd, and long Sustain'd the madness of the noisy throng. Dryden.

The muse resumes her long-forgotten lays.
And love, as lord's, his ancient realm surveys. Dryden.

No man has complained that you have discours'd too long on any subject, for you leave us in an eagerness of learning more. Dryden.

Persia left for you
The realm of Candahar for dow'r I brought,
That long-contended prize for which you fought. Dryden.

It may help to put an end to that long-aggitated and unreasonable question, whether man's will be free or no? Locke.

Heav'n restores
To thy fond with the long-expected shore. Pope.

3. In the comparative, it signifies for more time; and in the superlative, for most time.

When she could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bulrushes. Exodus.

been found in it, and generally spread long ago,
and beyond the memory of all ages. Tillotson.

Say, that you once were virtuous long ago?
A frugal, hardy people. Philip's Briton.

6. [for along; au long, Fr.] All along;
throughout: of time.

There sat a man of ripe and perfect age,
Who did them meditate all his life long. F. Queen.

Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long,
And then they say no spirit walks abroad,
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, no witch hath power to charm,
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time. Shaksp.

He fed me all my life long to this day. Genesis.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psalms.

LONG. adv. [[gelang, a fault, Sax.] By the fault; by the failure. A word now out of use, but truly English.

Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pains and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good. Hooker.

Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours are won away,
Long all of Somerset, and his delay. Shakespeare.

Address, all this can be long of you. Shakespeare.

the place the Turkish tyrant long'd after. Knolles.

If the report be good, it causeth love,
And longing hope, and well assured joy. Darics.

His sons, who seek the tyrant to sustain,
And long for arbitrary lords again,
He dooms to death deserv'd. Dryden's Tancid.

Glad of the gift, the new-made warrior goes,
And arms among the Greeks, and longs for equal foes. Dryden.

Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortality? Addison's Cato.

There's the tie that binds you;
You long to call him father: Maria's charms
Work in your heart unseen, and plead for Cato. Addison.

Nicomedes longing for herrings, was supplied with fresh ones by his cook, at a great distance from the sea. Arbuthnot.

Through stormy seas
I counted dangers, and long'd for death. A. Philips.

LONGANIMITY. n. f. [longanimitas, Lat.
longanimitt, Fr.] Forbearance; patience of offenders.

It had overcome the patience of Job, as it did the meekness of Moses, and surely had mastered any but the longanimity and lasting forbearance of God. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That innocent and holy nation had rather go clad in the snowy white robes of meekness and longanimity, than in the purple mantle of blood.

Howe's England's Tears.

LONGBOAT. n. f. The largest boat be-

In which y' are hamper'd by the felloek,
Cannot but put y' in the midst of wedlock. Hudib.

LOORD. n. f. [loerd, Dutch; lourdant, French; lurdas, Erie; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Trevour derives lourdant from Lorde or Lourde, a village in Gascoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they.
But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gas-coigns are so far removed, that they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erie imports some degree of knavery, but in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes re-proachful heaviness, or stupid laziness.— Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord;
and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called,
for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e.
lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm; that if it for-tuned a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw a Dane set foot upon the same,
he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppressed, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dulness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean.] A drone.

Siker, thou'st but a lazy loord,
And rekes much of thy swinke,
That with fond terms and witless words
To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Spenser.

To LOOSE. v. a. [lejan, Saxon.]

1. To unbind; to untie any thing fastened.
The shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose. Acts.

without the particular designs; so is it to speak of lawfulness, without the particular cases. Bacon.

It seems unaccountable to be so exact in the quantity of liquor where a small error was of little concern, and to be so loose in the doses of powerful medicines. Arbuthnot.

8. Not strict; not rigid.

Because conscience, and the fear of observing from that which is right, maketh them diligent observers of circumstances, the loose regard whereof is the nurse of vulgar folly. Hooker.

9. Unconnected; rambling.

I dare venture nothing without a strict examination; and am as much ashamed to put a loose in-digested play upon the publick, as to offer brass money in a payment. Dryden.

Varro spends whole mornings in scanning over loose and unconnected pages, and with fresh curiosity is ever glancing over new words and ideas, and yet treasures up but little knowledge. Watts.

10. Lax of body; not cossive.

What hath a great influence upon the health, is going to stool regularly: people that are very loose have seldom strong thoughts, or strong bodies. Locke.

11. Disengaged; not enslaved.

Their prevailing principle is, to sit as loose from pleasures, and be as moderate in the use of them, as they can. Atterbury.

12. Disengaged from obligation: commonly with from; in the following line
with of.

Now I stand
Loose of my vow; but who knows Cato's thoughts? Addison.

13. Free from confinement.

They did not let prisoners loose homeward; for with the wildest tempests loose,
That thrown again upon the coast,
I may once more repeat my pain. Prior.

14. Remiss; not attentive.

15. To break loose. To gain liberty.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason and to want that restraint of examination which keeps us from chasing the worse, be liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

Like two black storm on either hand,
Our Spanish army and the Indians stand;

This only space betwixt the clouds is clear,
Where you, like day, break loose from both appear.
Dryden.

16. To let Loose. To set at liberty; to set at large; to free from any restraint. And let the living bird loose into the open field.
Leuticus.

We ourselves make our fortunes good or bad; and when God lets loose a tyrant upon us, or a sickness, if we fear to die, or know not to be patient, the calamity sits heavy upon us.
Taylor.

In addition and division, either of space or duration, it is the number of its repeated additions or divisions that alone remains distinct, as will appear to any one who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter.
Locke.

If improvement cannot be made a recreation, they must be let loose to the childish play they fancy; which they should be weaned from, by being made farthest of it.
Locke.

Loose. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

Come, and forsake thy cloying store,
And all the busy pageantry
That wife men scorn, and fools adore:
Come, give thy soul a loose, and taste the pleasures of the poor.
Dryden.

Lucia, might my big swollen heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow,
Marsia could answer thee in sighs.
Addison.

The dery Pegasus disdain
To mind the rider's voice, or hear the reins;
When glorious fields and opening camps he views,
He runs with an unbounded loose.
Prior.

Poets should not, under a pretence of imitating the ancients, give themselves such a loose in lyrics, as if there were no connection in the world.
Felton.

2. Diffusion from any restraining force.

Air at large maketh no noise, except it be sharply percutted; as in the sound of a string, where air is percutted by a hard and stiff body, and with a sharp loose.
Bacon.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus, Lat.] To make smooth or slippery; to smooth.

There are aliments which, besides this lubricating quality, stimulate in a small degree. Arbuth.

The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and the saponaceous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate. Sharp.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus,
Lat.] To smooth; to make slippery.

LUBRICITY. n. f. [from lubricus, Latin, lubricité, French.]

1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.
2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.

Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature;
the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation. Ray.

3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.
The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same conveniences in any modification. Mare.

He that enjoyed crowns, and knew their worth, expected them not out of the charge of universal lot; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the uncertainty of human affairs, and the lubricity of his subject. Guineville.

4. Wantonness; lewdness.
From the lechery of these fanns, he thinks that satyr is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided. Dryden.

LUBRIC. adj. [lubricus, Lat.]

1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.
A throng
Of short thick fobs, whose thund'ring volleys float
And rattle themselves over her lubric throat
In panting murmurs. Cragshaw.

2. Uncertain; unsteady.
I will deduce him from his cradle through the deep and lubric waves of fate, till he is swallowed in the gulph of fatality. Wotton.

3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, French.]
Why were we hurry'd down
This lubric and adult'rate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
To encrease the flaming ordures of the flame? Dryden.

LUBRICOUS. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]

1. Slippery; smooth.
The parts of water being volatile and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it. Woodward.

2. Uncertain.
The judgment being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions. Glansville.

LUBRIFICATION. n. f. [lubricus and fio,
Lat.] The act of smoothing.

A twofold liquor is prepared for theunction and lubrication of the heads of the bones; an oily

Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat. Ben Jonson.

A spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucid orb,
Through his glass'd optick tube yet never saw. Milton.

LUCERN. n. f. [medico.] An herb remarkable for quick growth.

LUCID. adj. [lucidus, Lat. lucide, Fr.]
1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd; Liverier than Melcham. Milton.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light. Ray.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand, will, by discharging against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm. Newton.

The pearls shell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phœbus warm the up'ning ore to gold. Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.
On the fertile banks,
Of Abana and Pharpar, lucid streams. Milton.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance. Gulliver's Travels.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madness.

The long diffusions of the two houses, which,
although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth. Bacon.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day. Dryden.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired
he would please to let me see his book. Tatler.

A few festal and voluptuous persons may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conscience. Bentley.

LUCIDITY. n. f. [from lucid.] Splendour; brightness.

LUCIFEROUS. adj. [lucifer, Lat.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

The experiment is not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt. Boyle.

LUCIFICK. adj. [lux and facio, Latin.]
Making light; producing light.

When made to converge, and to mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorisick, is interrupted. Grew.

LUC. n. f. [geluck, Dutch.]

1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event.

LUC

He forc'd his neck into a noose,
To shew his play at last and loose;
And, when he chanc'd to 'scape, shiftook,
For art and subtlety, his luck. Hudibras.

Some such method may be found by human industry or luck, by which compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

2. Fortune, good or bad.
Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser.

Farwel, good luck go with thee. Shakespeare.
I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.

He told me, that rebellion had all luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. Shakespeare.

That part of mankind who have had justice, or the luck, to pass in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent. Temple.

Such, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being fortunate indeed. South.

The guests are found too numerous for the treat,
But all, it seems, who had the luck to eat,
Swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat. Tate.

LUCKILY. adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately;
by good hap.

It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form. Dryden.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications. Addis.

LUCKINESS. n. f. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.

He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding. Locke.

LUCKLESS. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries. Spenser.

Never shall my thoughts be late,
Though luckless, yet without disgrace. Snelling.

What else but his immoderate lust of pow'r,
Prayers made and grants d'm a lucky hour? Dry.

LUCKY. adj. [from luck; geluckig, Dutch.]
Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more lucky might,
Dispos'd with that deformed, dismal sight,
Fled all away. Spenser.

Perhaps some arm more lucky than the roth,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage. Addison.

LUCRATIVE. adj. [lucratus, Fr. lucrati-vus, Lat.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate: other contracts not so. Bacon.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture. Brownie.

LUCRE. n. f. [lucrum, Lat.] Gain; profit;
pecuniary advantage. In an ill sense.

Malice and lucre in them
Have laid this woe here. Shakespeare.

They all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn
Of lucre and ambition. Milton.

A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of pow'r, the blast of publick breath,
The lust of lucre, and the dread of death. Pope.

LUCRIFEROUS. adj. [lucrum and ficio,
Lat.] Gainful; profitable.

Silver was afterwards separated from the gold, but in so small a quantity, that the experiment, the costs and pains considered, was not lucriferous. Boyle.

LUCRIFICK. adj. [lucrum and facio, Lat.]
Producing gain.

LUCTATION. n. f. [luctor, Lat.] Struggle; effort; contest.

Thy lucubrations have been perused by several of our friends. Taylor.

LUCUBRATORY. adj. [lucubratorius, from lucubror, Lat.] Composed by candlelight.

You must have a dish of coffee, and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend. Pope.

LUCULENT. adj. [luculentus, Latin.]

1. Clear; transparent; lucid. This word is perhaps not used in this sense by any other writer.

And luculent along
The purer rivers flow. Thomson.

2. Certain; evident.

They are against the obdurate incredulity of the Jews, the most luculent testimonies that Christian religion hath. Hosker.

LUDICROUS. adj. [ludicer, Lat.] Burlesque; merry; sportive; exciting laughter.

Plutarch quotes this instance of Homer's judgment, in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction. Brown.

LUDICROUSLY. adv. [from ludicrous.]

Sportively; in burlesque; in a manner that may excite laughter.

LUDICROUSNESS. n. f. [from ludicrous.]

Burlesque; sportiveness; merry cast or manner; ridiculoufness.

LUDIFICATION. n. f. [ludificor, Latin.]

The act of mocking, or making sport of another. Dick.

LUFF. n. f. [In Scotland.] The palm of the hand.

To LUFF. v. n. [or loof.] To keep close to the wind. Sea term.

Contract your swelling sails, and luff to wind. Dryden.

To LUG. v. a. [aluccan, Saxon, to pull; loga, Swedish, the hollow of the hand.]

1. To hale or drag; to pull with rugged violence.

You gods! why this

Will lug your priests and servants from your sides. Shakspeare.

Thy bear is safe, and out of peril.

The lugg indeed, and wounded very ill. Hudib.

When luga bears agree with bears,

Shall secret ones lug hunts by th' ears? Hudibras.

See him drag his feeble legs about

Like hounds ill coupled: Jowler lugs him still

Through hedges. Dryden.

Whole pleasure is to see a strumpet tear

A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair. Dryd.

Either every single animal spirit must convey a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and to lug off every one his share. Collier.

2. To LUG out. To draw a sword, in burlesque language.

But butt and belmen never know these cares,

No time, nor trick of law, their action bars;

They will be heard, or they lug out and cut. Dry.

To LUG. v. n. To drag; to come heavily;

perhaps only misprinted for laga.

My dragging soul flies under her own pitch,

Like fowl in air, too damp, and lugs along.

As it were a body in a body. Dryden.

LUG. n. f.

A kind of small fish.

They feed on salt unmerchable pilchards,

ing worms, lugs, and little crabs. Carew.

[In Scotland.] An ear.

Lug, a land measure; a pole or perch.

That ample pit, yet far renown'd

For the large leap which Debon did compel

LUL

CESSALIN to make, being eight bags of ground. Spens.

LUGGAGE. n. f. [from lag.] Any thing cumbersome and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back. Shakspeare.

What do you mean

To doat thus on such luggage? Shakspeare.

Think not thou to find me slack, or need

Thy politic maxims, or that cumbersome

Luggage of war there shown me. Milton.

How durst thou with that fullen luggage

O' th' self, old ir'n, and other baggage,

To oppose thy lumber against us? Hudibras.

The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the rustling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked. Glanville.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,

And leave the luggage of good works behind. Dry.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey. Swift to Pope.

LUGUBRIOUS. adj. [lugubre, Fr. lugubris, Lat.] Mournful; sorrowful.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whining tone, makes up the sum of many mens humilitations. Decay of Piet.

LUKEWARM. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is hleod; in old Frisick hlj; in Dutch lieue; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second; as we say, boiling hot.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

A dreary coric, whole life away did pass,

All hallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,

That from his wound yet welled forth alas! Spens.

May you a better least never behold,

You knot of mouth friends: smoke and lukewarm water

Is your perfection. Shakspeare.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to contemplate hot and sharp humours. Wysman's Surgery.

Whence is it but from this attractive power, that water, which alone distils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not distil from salt of tartar without a great heat? Newton.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If some few continue stedfast, it is an obedience to lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of passion. Dryden.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue

In lukewarm patriots Addison.

LUKEWARMLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate warmth.

2. With indifference.

LUKEWARMNESS. n. f. [from lukewarm.]

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.

2. Indifference; want of ardour.

Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness. King Charles.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Spratt.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness. Swift.

To LULL. v. a. [lulu, Danish; lallo, Lat.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound.

There trickled softly down

A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play

Amongst the pumy flowers, and made a sound

To lull him fast asleep, that by it lay. F. Queen.

Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie,

To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.

These lull'd by nightingales embracing sleep. Milton.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

To find & see it shall not be his hap,

[And peace shall lull him in her flow'ry lap. Milton.

LUM

No more these scenes my meditations aid,

Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope

By the vocal woods and waters half'd,

And lost in lonely musing in a dream. Thomson

LULLABY. n. f. [lullus, Lat. Quem nutritum fuisse deum contendit Turnebus, from lull: it is observable, that the nurses call sleep by, by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep.] A song to still babes.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles keel,

Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fairfax.

Philomel, with melody,

Sing in your sweet lullaby;

Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby. Shakspeare.

If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further.

—Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Shakspeare.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children. Locke on Education.

LUMBAGO. n. f. [lumbi, Lat. the loins.]

Lumbago are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede agues and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawnings, shudderings, and erratic pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers. Quinc.

LUMBER. n. f. [loma, geloma, Saxon, household-stuff; lommering, the dirt of a house, Dutch.] Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value.

The very bed was violated

By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,

And thrown amongst the common lumber. Otway.

One son at home

Concerns thee more than many guests to come.

If to some useful art he be not bred,

He grows mere lumber, and is worse than dead. Dryden.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store,

Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor. Dryden.

If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber. Grew.

The poring scholiasts mark;

Was, who, like owls, see only in the dark;

A lumber-house of books in every head. Pope.

To LUMBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly.

In Rolls we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear. Haymer.

To LUMBER. v. n. To move heavily, as burdened with his own bulk.

First let them run at large,

Nor lumber o'er the meads, nor cross the wood. Dryden.

LUMINARY. n. f. [luminare, Lat. luminare, Fr.]

1. Any body which gives light.

The great luminary

Dispenses light from far. Milton.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.

Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he eloped in his face, dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

3. Any one that instructs mankind.

The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island. Bentley.

LUMINATION. n. f. [from lumen, Lat.]

Emission of light. Dick.

LUMINOUS. adj. [luminous, Fr.]

1. Shining; emitting light.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate. Bacon.

Its first convex divides

The luminous inferior orb into shades, Milton.

From chaos.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes. Bentley.

LUM

2. Enlightened.
Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east, and with her part averie
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Shining; bright.
The most luminous of the primæval colours are the yellow and orange; these affect the tents more strongly than all the rest together. Newton.
- LUMP. n. f. [lompe, Dutch.]
1. A small mass of any matter.
The word lump is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they cross the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Bacon.
Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear. Boyle.
A wretch is prisoner made;
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous fow
In morsels cut. Lute.
Every fragrant flower, and od'rous green,
Were fragrant well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.
To conceive this of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country-maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present next of. Locke.
2. A shapeless mass.
Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shakspeare.
Why might there not have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together? Kent's Lear.
3. Mats undistinguished.
All mens honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what punch he please. Shakspeare.
It is rare to find any of these metals pure: but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all potentially in one lump. Woodward.
4. The whole together; the gross.
If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump. Addison.
Other epidemical vices are rife and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley.
The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists. Swift.
To LUMP. v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.
The expenses ought to be lumped together
Swift's Par.
Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counter-poise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale. Adisson.
- LUMPSH. n. f. [lump and fish.] A sort of fish.
- LUMPING. adj. [from lump.] Large;
heavy; great. A low word.
Nick, thou shalt have a lumping penny worth.
Arbutnot.
- LUMPISH. adj. [from lump.] Heavy;
gross; dull; unactive; bulky.
Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man,
and therefore heavy and lumpy. Raleigh.
Sylvia is lumpy, heavy, melancholy. Shakspeare.
Love is all spirit: but his foener may
Be taken tardy, when they might-tricks play.
Than we; we are too dull and lumpy. Suckling.
Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sink down, which, by their heaviness and lumpy figure, made their way more speedily. Burnet.
How dull and how insensible a beast
Is man, who yet would lord it o'er the rest?
Philosophers and poets vainly strove
In every age the lumpy mass to move. Dryden.

LUN

- LUNARITY. adv. [from lunipish.] With heaviness; with stupidity.
- LUNPISHNESS. n. f. [from lunipish.] Stupid heaviness.
- LUNARY. adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps;
full of compact masses.
One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays,
but too small for light garden mould. Mortimer.
- LUNACY. n. f. [from luna, Lat. the moon.]
A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.
Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Shakspeare's As you like it.
Your kindred sin your house,
As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shakspeare.
There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, than when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in,
think you have nothing. Suckling.
- LUNAR. } adj. [lunaire, French; luna- LUNARY. } ria, Latin.]
1. Relating to the moon.
They that have resolved that these years were but lunar years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted. Raleigh.
Then we upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.
2. Being under the dominion of the moon.
They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon's Natural History.
The figure of its seed much resembles a horseshoe, which Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signification, and raised the figure into a lunar representation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- LUNARY. n. f. [lunaria, Lat. lunatic, Fr.]
Moonwort.
Then sprinkles she the juice of rue
With nine drops of the midnight dew,
From lunary distilling. Dryden's Nymphid.
- LUNATED. adj. [from luna, Lat.] Formed like a half moon.
- LUNATICK. adj. [lunaticus, Lat.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.
Bedlam beggars, from low farms, Sometimes with lunatick haas, sometimes with puys, Shakspeare.
Enforce their charity.
- LUNATICK. n. f. A madman.
The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
The madman. Shakspeare.
I dare ensure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years; because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so. Graunt's Bills.
See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.
The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hospital for the reception of ideots and lunaticks. Swift.
- LUNATION. n. f. [lunation, Fr. luna, Lat.]
The revolution of the moon.
If the lunations be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever. Holder on Time.
- LUNCH. } n. f. [Mishew derives it LUNcheon. } from lunja, Spanish;
Skinner from kleinken, a small piece, Teutonic. It probably comes from clutch or clunch.] As much food as one's hand can hold.

LUR

- When heavy show flood's falling, like an ear,
I die'd the luncheon from the barley loaf;
With crumbled bread I thicken'd well the mess. Gay.
- LUNE. n. f. [luna, Lat.]
1. Any thing in the shape of a half moon.
A troop of Janizaries strew'd the field,
Fall'd in jost ranks or wedges, luncs, or squares,
Firm as they stood. Watts.
2. Fits of lunacy or frenzy; mad freaks.
The French say of a man fantastical or whimsical, Il a des lunes. Hanmer.
Bestrew them
These dangerous, unsafe luncs, i' th' king;
He must be told on't, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman's best. Shakspeare.
3. A leath: as, the lune of a hawk.
- LUNETTE. n. f. [French.] A small half moon.
Lunette is a covered place made before the coun-tine, which consists of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raised in fesses full of water, to serve instead of a sluice braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage: it is six fathoms in extent, of which the parapet is four. Trenou.
- LUNGS. n. f. [lungen, Sax. long, Dut.]
The lights; the part by which breath is inspired and expired.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me. Shak.
The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,
Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel. Dryden.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.
- LUNGED. adj. [from lungs.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs;
drawing in and emitting air, as the lungs
in an animal body.
The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows huffing fire provoke. Dryden.
- LUNG-GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.]
The lungs sometimes grow fast to the skin that lines the breast within; whence such as are detained with that accident are lung-grown. Harter.
- LUNGWORT. n. f. [pulmonaria, Latin.]
A plant. Miller.
- LUNISO'LAR. adj. [lunifolair, Fr. luna and solaris, Lat.] Compounded of the revolution of sun and moon.
- LUNT. n. f. [lonte, Dut.] The matchcord with which guns are fired.
- LUPINE. n. f. [lupin, Fr. lupinus, Latin.]
A kind of pulse.
It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose em-palement rises the pale, which afterwards turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks. Miller.
When Protogenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined. Peackam on Drawing.
Where stalks of lupines grew,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year. Dryd.
- LURCH. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from fourche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch;
fourche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]
To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a sordid or deserted condition; to leave without help. A ludicrous phrase.
Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the wait design,
And leave us in the lurch. Denham.

*But though thou art of a different kind,
I will not have thee in the land.* Madison.
There is sure to be a deep conspiracy with those that, when they had themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. U. Strange.

Can you suppose your word with three of the honestest best men in the world? It is base to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last. Arbuth.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison.

To LURCH. v. n. [loeren, Dutch, or rather from the noun.]

1. To shift; to play tricks.

I myself, sometimes leaving goodness on my left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shaksp.

2. To lie in wait; we now rather use lurk.

While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurking upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. DeFoe.

To LURCH. v. a. [lurcor, Latin.]

1. To devour; to swallow greedily.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurceth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]

He waxed like a tree;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurched all swords o' the garland. Shaksp.
God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an easiness in them, as should to quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant. South.

3. To steal privily; to filch; to pilfer.

LU'RCHEE. n. f. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.

His thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his play the fuddling lurchee flies;
Whilst every honest tongue stop thief's rounds. Gay.

2. A dog that watches for his game.

I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and setters. Tatler.

3. [lurco, Lat.] A glutton; a gorman-dizer. Not used.

LU'RE. n. f. [lurre, Fr. lore, Dut.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till the swoop, the milt not be full gorg'd,
For then the never looks upon her lure. Shaksp.

This lure she cast abroad, thinking that this fane and belief would draw, at one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon's Henry vii.

A great estate to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

This lute-neck'd pride, nor wit nor force can bend,
Nor high-blown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.

A false Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tarts, and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.

How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty, and her lures, easily scorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent? Milton.

Lure
Held out her lure to his superior eye,
And grieved to see him pale contemptuous by. Madden.

To LURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks,

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill, I had suddenly an offender, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.

To LURE. v. n. To attract; to entice;
to draw.

Against a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where whistles the encamp'd, come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lur'd on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could. Temple.

Should you lure
From his dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various science lures the learned eye. Gay.

LU'RID. adj. [luridus, Lat.] Gloomy; dismal. Not used.

Slow settling o'er the lurid grove,
Unusual darkness broods, Thomson.

To LURK. v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See LUNCH.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.

Far in land a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in loathsome den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked. Fairy Queen.

Millbrook lurketh between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing his name from a mill and little brook running there through Caren.

They lay not to live by their woe,
But theavily loiter and lurk. Taffer's Husbandry.

If sinners enter thee, consent not; if they say, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent. Proverbs.

The wife, when danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest, and fecundest by her husband slays. Milton.

The lurking gold upon the fatal tree. Dryden.

Lurk'd in her hand, and mournd his captive queen;
He springs to vengeance. Pope.

I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world: I have set my name at length. Swift.

LU'RKER. n. f. [from lurk.] A thief that lies in wait.

LU'RKINGPLACE. n. f. [lurk and place.]
Hiding place; secret place.

Take knowledge of all the lurkingplaces where he hideth himself. 1 Samuel.

LU'RICIOUS. adj. [from delicious, say some;
but Shinner more probably derives it from luxurious, corruptly pronounced.]

1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.

2. Sweet in a great degree.

The food that to him now is as luscious as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as coloquintida. Shaksp.

With brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glass,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground. Milt.

Blown roses hold their sweetness to the lust,
And rous'd keep their luscious native taste. Dryd.

3. Pleading; delightful.

He will bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gaudy purchase. South.

LU'SCIOUSLY. adv. [from luscious.] Sweet
to a great degree.

LU'SCIOUSNESS. n. f. [from luscious.] Immoderate sweetness.

Can there be a greater indulgence in God, than to embitter sensualities whose lusciousness intoxicates us, and to clip wings which carry us from him? Decay of Picty.

Peas breed worms by reason of the lusciousness and sweetness of the grain. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LU'SEY. n. f. [lupus, cervarius, Lat.] A lynx.

LU'N. adj. Of a dark, deep, full colour, opposite to pale and faint; from lunche.

How lush and lusty the grass looks! how green!
Shaksp.

LU'N. adj. [lunche, Fr.] Idle; lazy; worthless. Dict.

LU'SKISH. adj. [from lusk.] Somewhat

Advise how war may be best upheld,
Mann'd by her two main nerves, iron and gold,
 In all her equipage. Milton.

Theodosius having mann'd his soul with proper reflections, exerted himself in the best manner he could, to animate his penitent. Addison.

4. To tame a hawk.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
 To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
 That is, to watch her. Shakespeare.

5. To attend; to serve; to wait on as a man or servant.

Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art hither to be worn in my cup than to wait at my heels: I was never mann'd with agate till now. Shakespeare.

They dish'd their husbands land
 In decoctions, and are mann'd
 With ten empiricks in their chamber, Lying for the spirit of amber. Ben Jonson.

 Should leave a tract of glory in the skies. Dryden.

The less he had to lose, the less he car'd
 To manage loathsome life, when love was the reward. Dryden.

6. To treat with caution or decency; this is a phrase merely gallick, not to be imitated.

Notwithstanding it was so much his interest to manage his protestant subjects in the country, he made over his principality to France. Addison.

To MAN'NAGE. v. n. To superintend affairs;
 to transact.

Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant
 What their unerring wisdom fees thee want. Dryd.

MAN'NAGE. n. s. [mesnage, menage, Fr.]

1. Conduct; administration.

To him put
 The manage of my state. Shakespeare.

Thus might have been prevented,
 With very easy arguments of love,
 Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
 With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shakespeare.

For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
 Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
 Ere further leisure yield them further means. Shak.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet. Bacon.

The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South.

2. Use; instrumentality.

To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped; for quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.

3. Government of a horse.

In thy slumbers
 I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,
 Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed. Shak.

The horse you must draw in his career with his manage and turn, doing the curvetto. Peucham.

4. Discipline; governance.

Whenever we take a strong bias, it is not out of a moral incapacity to do better, but for want of a careful manage and discipline to set us right at first. L'Estrange.

MAN'NAGEABLE. adj. [from manage.]

1. Easy in the use; not difficult to be wielded or moved.

The conditions of weapons and their improvement are, that they may serve in all weathers; and that the carriage may be light and manageable. Bacon.

Very long tubes are, by reason of their length, a to bend, and shake by bending so as to cause a cou-

MAN

tinual trembling in the objects, whereas by contrivance the glasses are readily manageable. Newton.

2. Governable; tractable.
MANAGEABLENESS. n. f. [from manageable.]

1. Accommodation to easy use.

This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed. Boyle.

2. Tractableness; easiness to be governed.
MANAGEMENT. n. f. [management, Fr.]

1. Conduct; administration.

An ill argument introduced with deference, will procure more credit than the profoundest science with a rough, insolent, and noisy management. Locke.

The wrong management of the earl of Godolphin was the only cause of the union. Swift.

2. Prudence; cunning practice.

Mark with what management their tribes divide; Some stick to you, and some to either side. Dryd.

3. Practice; transaction; dealing.

He had great managements with ecclesiasticks in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Add.

MANAGER. n. f. [from manage.]

1. One who has the conduct or direction of any thing.

A skilful manager of the rabble, so long as they have but ears to hear, needs never enquire whether they have any understanding. South.

The manager opens his sluice every night, and distributes the water into the town. Addison.

An artful manager, that crept between His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen. Pope.

2. A man of frugality; a good husband.

A prince of great aspiring thoughts; in the main, a manager of his treasure, and yet bountiful, from his own motion, where, or he discerns merit. Temple.

The most severe censure cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the matter of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

MANAGERY. n. f. [menagerie, Fr.]

1. Conduct; direction; administration.

They who most exactly describe that battle give so full an account of their conduct or direction in the managery of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarend.

2. Husbandry; frugality.

The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns are conferred gratis. Decay of Picty.

3. Manner of using.

No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloody skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready managery of their weapons. Decay of Picty.

MANATION. n. f. [manatio, Latin.] The act of issuing from something else.

MANCHE. n. f. [Fr.] A sleeve.

MANCHET. n. f. [michet, Fr. Skinner.] A small loaf of fine bread.

Take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds. Bacon.

I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. Morc's Dialogues.

MANCHINEEL tree. n. f. [mancanilla, Lat.]

The manchineel tree is a native of the West Indies, and grows to the size of an oak: its wood is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark must be burnt out before the work is begun; for it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should fly into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippin; many Europeans have suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it: the leaves abound with juice of the same nature; cattle never shelter themselves, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade; yet goats eat this fruit without injury. Miller.

To MANCIPATE. v. a. [mancipo, Lat.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.

MAN

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the methods, which are in themselves more variable, and less circumscribed to stated notions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hall.

MANCIPATION. n. f. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation.

MANCIPLE. n. f. [manceps, Lat.] The steward of a community; the purveyor: it is particularly used of the purveyor of a college.

Their manciple fell dangerously ill, Bread must be had, their grist went to the mill: This Simkin moderately stole before, Their steward sick, he robb'd them ten times more. Betterton's Miller of Trompington.

MANDAMUS. n. f. [Lat.] A writ granted by the king, so called from the initial word.

MANDARIN. n. f. A Chinese nobleman or magistrate.

MANDATE. n. f. [mandatum, Latin.]

1. Command.

Her force is not any where so apparent as in express mandates or prohibitions, especially upon advice and consultation going before. Hooker.

The necessity of the times cast the power of the three estates upon himself, that his mandates should pass for laws, whereby he laid what taxes he pleased. Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. Precept; charge; commission, sent or transmitted.

Who knows, If the fearless Caesar have not sent His powerful mandate to you. Shakspeare.

This Moor, Your special mandate, for the state affairs Hath hither brought. Shakspeare.

He thought the mandate forg'd, your death conceal'd. Dryden.

This dream all powerful Juno sends, I hear Her mighty mandates, and her words you hear. Dry.

MANDATOR. n. f. [Lat.] Director.

A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his proctor. Ayliffe.

MANDATORY. adj. [mandare, Lat.] Preceptive; directory.

MANDIBLE. n. f. [mandibula, Lat.] The jaw; the instrument of manducation.

He saith, only the crocodile moveth the upper jaw, as if the upper mandible did make an articulation with the cranium. Grew.

MANDIBULAR. adj. [from mandibula, Lat.] Belonging to the jaw.

MANDITION. n. f. [mandigione, Italian.] A soldier's coat. Skinner. A loose garment; a sleeveless jacket. Ainsworth.

MANDRAKE. n. f. [mandragoras, Latin; mandragore, French.] A plant.

The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts; the root is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.

Among other virtues, mandrake has been fully celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a narcotick of the most powerful kind. Hill's Materia Medica.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan, I would invent us bitter teaching terms, As curs, as harsh, and horrible to hear. Shakspeare.

Not poppy, nor mandragora, Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world, Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep. Shak. And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth, That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shakspeare.

MANDREL. n. f. [mandrin, Fr.] An instrument to hold in the lathe the substance to be turned.

Mandrels are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work that is to be turned; this mandrel is a shank, or pin-mandrel. Maron.

To MANDUATE. v. a. [manduco, Latin.] To chew; to eat.

MANDUCATION. n. f. [manducatio, Lat.] Eating.

Manducation is the action of the lower jaw in chewing the food, and preparing it in the mouth before it is received into the stomach. Quincy.

As he who is not a holy person does not feed upon Christ, it is apparent that our manducation must be spiritual, and therefore to mastic the food, and consequently it cannot be natural flesh. Taylor.

MANE. n. f. [maene, Dutch.] The hair which hangs down on the neck of horses, or other animals.

Dametas was tossed from the saddle to the mane of the horse, and thence to the ground. Sidney. A currie comb, mane comb, and whip for a judge. Taylor.

The weak wanton Cupid Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold; And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane, Be shook to air. Shakspeare.

The horses breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light-fire. Kneller.

A lion shakes his dreadful mane, And angry grows. Waller.

For quitting both their swords and reins, They grasp'd with all their strength the manes. Hudibras.

To MAN'GLE. v. a. [mangelen, Dutch, to be wanting; mangus, Lat.] To lacerate; to cut or tear piece meal; to butcher.

Catho, may you suspect
Who they should be, that thus have mangled you?
Shakespeare.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakspeare.
Thoughts, my tormentors arm'd with deadly fangs.

Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts, Exasperate, exasperate, and into Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb,
Or medicinal liquor can alluage. Milton.

Mangle mischief. Don Sebastian.
The triple porter of the Stygian feat,
With lolling tongue, lay sawning at thy feet,
And, seiz'd with fear, forgot his mangled meat.
Dryden.

What could swords or poisons, racks or flames,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame!
More fatal Henry's words; they murder Eleanora's fame. Prior.

It is hard, that not one gentleman's daughter Should read her own tongue; as any one may find, who can hear them when they are disposed to mangle a play or a novel, where the least word out of the common road discorrupts them. Swift.

They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, only to shorten a syllable; so that most of the books we see now-a-days, are full of those manglings and abbreviations. Swift.

Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and curtailing authors. Baker on Learning.

MANGLER. n. f. [from mangle.] A hacker; one that destroys bunglingly.

santhrope; one that hates mankind.

MAN'HOOD. n. f. [from man.]

1. Human nature.
In Seth was the church of God established;
from whom Christ descended, as touching his manhood. Raleigh.

Not therefore joins the Son Manhood to godhead, with more strength to foil thy enemy. Milton.

2. Virility; not womanhood.
'Tis in my pow'r to be a sovereign now,
And, knowing more, to make his manhood bow.
Dryden.

3. Virility; not childhood.
Tethy and wayward was thy infancy;
Thy school days frightful, desolate, wild, and furious;
Thy prime of manhood daring, bold, and venturesome.
Shakespeare.

By fraud or force the suitor train destroy,
And starting into manhood, scorn the boy. Pope.

4. Courage; bravery; resolution; fortitude.

M A N

Nothing so hard but his valour overcame; which

When manly Meria, that two-handed whore, Astride on horse-back hunts the Tuscan bear, Dry MA'NOR. n. f. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin; maner, Armorick.]

Manor signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass of ground, granted by the king to some man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterwards this great man parcelled his land to other manner men, making them again such services and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the inferiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these manors and lands to given them by their price, and many for capital offences have sold them to their king; and thereby they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site: for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Covent.

My parks, my walks, my manors that I hold, Ev'n now forsake me; and of all my lands Is nothing left me. Shakespeare.

Kinmen of mine They shall abound as formerly. O day! Have broke their backs with laying manors on them For this great journey. Shakespeare.

When priests are more in words than matter,
When brewers murr their malt with water. Shaksp.

I pray you mar no more trees with writing fons in their barks.—I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favour'dly. Shaksp.

Beware thou of honour, be not then disgrac'd Take care thou mar not when thou thinkest to mend. Felissa.

Aumarle became the man that all did mar,
Whether through indiscretion, chance, or worse. Donich.

The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and murr's business, when great in dependencies. Bacon's Essays.

O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring!
How mutually they link'd and folded are:
And hear how oft one disagreeing string
The harmony doth rather make than mar. Davies.

Iron, envy, and despair,
Mar'd all his borrow'd village, and betray'd Him counterfeit. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Had he been there, untimely joy through all Men's hearts diffus'd, had mar'd the funeral. Voltaire.

Mother!

'Tis much unsafe my fire to disobey:
Not only you provoke him to your cost,
But murr's his murr'd, and the good cheer is lost. Dryden.

MARANATHA. n. f. [Syriack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St.
Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha, which is as much as to say, May't thou be devoted to the greatest of evils, and to the utmost severity of God's judgments; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes. Galmet.

MARASMUS. n. f. [μαρασμος, from μαραινω.]

A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance. Quincy.

Fining atrophy.

Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence. Milton.

A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body, by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extinction of the body, caused through an immoderate heat. Hartley.

MARBLE. n. f. [marbre, Fr. marmor, Lat.]

1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in

—I aim'd so near when I suppos'd you lov'd.

—A right good marksmen. Shakspeare.

Whom nothing can procure,

When the wide world runs bias from his will,

To write his things, and there, not mend the ill:

This is the marksmen, safe and sure.

Who still is right, and prays to be so still. Herbert.

An ordinary marksmen may know certainly when he shoots less wide at what he aims. Dryden.

MARL. n. f. [maarl, Welsh; mergel, Dutch;

marga, Lat. marle, marne, Fr. in Sax.

menz is marrow, with an allusive signification, marle being the fatness of the earth.] A kind of clay, which is become fatter, and of a more enriching quality, by a better fermentation, and by its having lain so deep in the earth as not to have spent or weakened its fertilizing quality by any product. It is supposed to be much of the nature of chalk, and is believed to be fertile from its salt and only quality. Quincy.

We understand by the term marls simple native earths, less heavy than the bores or clays, not soft and unctuous to the touch, nor ductile while moist, dry and crumbly between the fingers, and readily dissoluble in water.

Marl is the best compost, as having most fatness, and not heating the ground too much. Bacon.

Uneasy steps

Over the burning marl, not like those steps

On heaven's azure. Milton.

Has crept too near his conscience. Shakspeare.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,

Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow.

Shakspeare.

The French king would have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception, that he should not marry her himself. Bacon.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do better please God than some virgins in their state of virginity. they, by giving an example of conjugal affection, by preserving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, please God in a higher degree than those virgins whose piety is not answerable to their opportunities. Taylor.

I propose that Palamon shall be

In marriage join'd with beautiful Emily. Dryden.

2. State of perpetual union.

MA'RRAGE is often used in composition.

In a late draught of marriage-articles, a lady stipulated with her husband, that she should be at liberty to patch on which side she pleased. Spectator.

By the honour of my marriage-bed,

Aliter young Arthur claim this land for mine. Shak.

M A R

To death when death again I would.
This grave's the second marriage-bed.
For though the hand of fate could force
Twist soul and body a divorce,
It could not sever man and wife,
Because they both liv'd but one life. Crowley.
Thereon his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.
Thou shalt come into the marriage-chamber too.
Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wout to endear affection, could set her sickleness; but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to wife Baccha, of whom she complained. Sidney.
Virgin awake! the marriage-hour is nigh. Pope.
Give me, to live and die.

A spotless maid, without the marriage-tie. Dryden.
MARRIAGEABLE. adj. [from marriage.]
1. Fit for wedlock; of age to be married.

Every wedding, one with another, produces four children, and that is the proportion of children which marriageable man or woman may be presumed shall have. Gravatt.

gal; connubial.

Thus have you shunn'd the marry'd state. Dryden.

MARROW. n. f. [merg, Sax. smerr, Eric;
smerrgh, Scottish.]

All the bones of the body which have any considerable thickness have either a large cavity, or they are spongy, and full of little cells: in both the one and the other there is an oleaginous substance, called marrow, contained in proper vessels or membranes, like the fat: in the large bones this line out, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small bladders, and enters some narrow passages, which lead to some fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supple the fibres of the bones, and render them less apt to break. Quincy.

Would he were wafed, marrow, bones, and all,
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring. Shakespeare.

The skull hath brains as a kind of marrow within it: the back bone hath one kind of marrow, and other bones of the body have another: the jaw-bones have no marrow levered, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon.

Pamper'd and edify'd their zeal
With marrow puddings nunny a meal. Hudibras.
He bit the dart, and wrench'd the wood away,
The point still buried in the marrow lay. Addison.

MARROW, in the 'Scottish dialect, to this day, denotes a fellow, companion, or associate; as also equal match, he met the Sax. meppre, a fen, or fenny place.

Gibson's Camden.

MARSH. n. f. [merre, Sax. See MARISH.]
A fen; a bog; a swamp; a watery tract of land.

In their courses make that round,
In meadows and in marshes found,
Of them to call the fenny ground,
Of which they have the keeping. Drayton.

Worms for colour and shape, alter even as the ground out of which they are got; as the marsh worm and the flag worm. Walton.

We may see in more temperate climates great varieties in the people thereof; the up-lands in England yield stout, sinewy, hardy men, the marsh- lands, men of large and high stature. Hale.

Your low meadows and marsh-lands you need not lay up till April, except the Spring be very wet, and your marshes very pondy. Mortimer.

The duke of Suffolk claims
To be high steward; next the duke of Norfolk
To be earl marshal. Shakespeare.

2. An officer who regulates combats in the lists.

Dares their pride presume against my laws,
As in a list field to fight their cause?
Unask'd the royal grant; no marshal by.
As kindly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

3. Any one who regulates rank or order at a feast, or any other assembly.

Through the hall there walked to and fro
A jolly yeoman, marshal of the feast,
Whose name was Appetite; he did bestow
Both guests and meats, whenever in they came,
And knew them how to order without blame. Spenser.

M A R

4. A harbinger; a purfuitant; one who goes before a prince to declare his coming, and provide entertainment.

Her face, when it was fairer, had been but as a marshal to lodge the love of her in his mind, which now was so well placed as it needed no help of outward harbinger. Sidney.

TO MARSHAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire, that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or sound. Bacon.

It is as unconceivable how it should be the directrix of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should marshal an army. Glennville.

Archies look'd not with so pleas'd a face,
In unobtain'd o'er his future Roman race,
And marshalling the heroes of his name.
As, in their order, next to night they came. Dryden.

2. To lend as a harbinger.

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going.
Shakespeare.

MARTIAL. adj. [martial, Fr. martialis, Lat.]

1. Warlike; fighting; given to war; brave.

Into my techie breast
Come gently, but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infect.
And hearts of great heroes dost enrage. Fanny Q.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them. Chapman.

It hath seldom been seen, that the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise, whereby it is manifest, that the northern tract of the world is the more martial region. Bacon.

His subjects call'd aloud for war;
But peaceful kings o'er martial people sit,
Each other's poise and counterbalance are. Dry.

a. Having a warlike show; suiting war.

See
His thousands, in what martial equipage
They issue forth! Steel bow and shafts their arms,
Of equal dread in flight or in pursuit. Milton.

When our country's cause provokes to arms,
How martial music every bosom warms. Pope.

3. Belonging to war; not civil; not according to the rules or practice of peaceable government.

MARTLET. } A kind of swallow.

This guest of Summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that heaven's breath
Smells sweetly here. No jutting linæe, Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant easle.
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate. Shakespeare.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gaze upon the gather'd clouds for rain;
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

MARTNETS. n. f. Small lines fastened to the leech of the sail, to bring that part of the leech which is next to the yard-arm close up to the sail, when the sail is to be furled.

MARTYR. n. f. [martyr; martyr, Fr.]

One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn;
if not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr. King Charles.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced. Brown.

Nearer heav'n his virtues shone more bright,
Like rising flames expanding in their height,
The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight. Dry.

To be a martyr signifies, only to witness the truth of Christ; but the witnessing of the truth then was so generally attended with persecution, that martyr dom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death. South's Sermons.

The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered. Addison.

Truth's early champion, martyr for his God.
Thomson.

To MARTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]

fession.

2. To murder; to destroy.

You could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shaksp.

If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.

Martyr'd with the gout.
MARTYRDOM. n. f. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr; the honour of a martyr; testimony born to truth by voluntary submission to death.

If an infidel should pursue to death an heretic professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of mar- tyrdom? Hooker.

Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

Herod, whose unblest
Hand, Of what darts not jealous greatness? tore
A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,
The blooms of martyrdom. Crymch.

Wars, little to the only argument
Heroick deem'd, chief martyr to dissent
With long and tedious havoc, fabled knights
In battles feng'd; the better fortune
Of patience and heroick martyrdom Unfing. Milton.

What mists of providence are these?
So faints, by supernatural pow'r set free,
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.

MARTYROLOGIST. n. f. [martyrologiste, Fr.] A writer of martyrology.

MARTYROLOGY. n. f. [martyrologe, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.] A register of martyrs.

In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little mense at their coming out. Stillingfleet.

MARVEL. n. f. [merveille, Fr.] A wonder;
any thing astonishing. Little in use.

A marvel it were, if a man could espy, in the whole Scripture, nothing which might breed a pre-bable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

I am scarce in breath, my lord.
—No marvel, you have to bestir'd your valour;
you cowardly recall! Shakespeare.

No marvel
My lord protector's hawk do towre so well. Shak.

MARVEL OF PERU. A flower. Ainsw.

To MARVEL. v. a. [merveiller, Fr.] To wonder; to be astonished. Dryden.

You make me marvel. Shakespeare.

Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. Shakespeare.

The army marvelled at it. Shakespeare.

The common proverb is, One for the long proverb, and one for the short. Zeckendorf.

MARVELLOUS. adj. [merveilleux, Fr.]

1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing.

She has a marvellous white hand, I must confess eyes. Shakespeare.

This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. Psalms.

2. Surpassing credit.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.
Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

3. The marvellous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.

MARVELLOUSLY. adv. [from marvellous.]
Wonderfully; strangely.

You look not well, feignior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd. Shaksp.

The encouragement of his too late success, with which he was marvellously elated. Clarendon.

MARVELLOUSNESS. n. f. [from marvellous.] Wonderfulness; strangeness; astonishingness.

MASCULINE. adj. [masculin, Fr. masculinus, Lat.]

1. Male; not female.

Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long! Shak.

His long beard notch the air and fire, the two masculine elements, exercising their operation upon nature, being the feminine. Peacham.

Oh why did God,
Creator wife, that peopled highest heav'n
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.

You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of Virtue. Addison.

3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.

MASCULINELY. adv. [from masculine.]
Like a man.

Aurelia tells me, you have done most masculinely,
And play the orator. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

MASCULINENESS. n. f. [from masculine.]
Mannishness; male figure or behaviour.

MASH. n. f. [mache, Dutch.]

1. The space between the threads of a net:
commonly written mesh.

To defend against the stings of bees, have a net knit with so small mashes, that a bee cannot get through. Mortimer.

2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguished or confused body,
[from mischen, Dut. to mix, or mascher,
French.]

3. A mixture for a horse.

Put half a peck of ground malt into a pail, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm: this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour. Farrier's Dictionary.

When wars foil, they feed them with mashes,
and other moist food. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To MASH. v. a. [mascher, Fr.]

1. To beat into a confused mass.

The pressure would be intolerable, and they would even mask themselves and all things else apiece. More.

To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without masking the meat. Swift.

2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.

What was he in the last of his days, as he was in the last of his days.

MASK. n. f. [masque, French.]

1. A cover to disguise the face, or to show the face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prisoner.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And throw her sun-expelling mask away;
The air hath starr'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pick'd the fly from the face of her face. Shakspeare.

Could we suppose that a mask represented ever so naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.

2. Any pretence or subterfuge.

Too plain thy nakedness of soul cry'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide,
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Pope.

3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night? Shakspeare.
4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild bustle.

They in the end agreed,
That at a masque and common reveling,
Which was ordain'd they should perform the deed. Daniel.

This thought might lead me through this world's vain mask,
Content, though blind, had I no other guide. Milton.

5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick style, without attention to rules or probability.

Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peacham.

TO MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]

1. To disguise with a mask or vifor.

What will grow of such errors as grow masked under the cloak of divine authority, impossible it is that the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.

'Tis not my blood
Wherein thou see'st me masked. Shakspeare.
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakspeare.

The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw an antique statue masked, which was perhaps designed for Quatius in the Eumach, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.

2. To cover; to hide.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
As when a piece of wanton lawn,
A thin aerial veil is drawn O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
More sweetly shows the blushing bride:
A soul whose intellectual beams
No mists do mask, no lazy steams. Crashaw.

TO MASK. v. n.

1. To revel; to play the mummer.

Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;
What masking stuff's here! Shakspeare.
Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame. Prior.

2. To be disguised any way.

MA'SKER. n. f. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.

Tell false Edward,
That Lewis of France is sending over masters,
To revel it with him and his new bride. Shakspeare.

Let the scenes abound with light, and let the masters that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down. Boaden.

The masters come late, and I think will stay,
Like furies, till the sock-actors are away. Boaden.
VOL. II.

MA'STER. adj. [construed from master.] See
Construed of master; see master; see master.

MASON. n. f. [maçon, Fr. machio, low Latin.] A builder with stone.

Many and a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth. Wotton.

A mason that makes a wall, meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work. Mor.

MA'ONRY. n. f. [maçonerie, French.] The craft or performance of a mason.

MASQUERA'DE. n. f. [from masque, Fr.]

1. A diversion in which the company is masked.

What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treach'rous tye, and daring spark,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark? Pope.

2. Disguise.

I was upon the frolic this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest,
Is forced to gain admittance in disguise, and court us in masquerade. Felton.

TO MASQUERA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go in disguise.

A freak took an ass in the head, and he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin. L'Estrange.

2. To assemble in masks.

I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.

MASQUERA'DER. n. f. [from masquerade.]

A person in a mask.

The most dangerous sort of cheats are but mas- queraders under the view of friends. L'Estrange.

MASS. n. f. [masse, Fr. masa, Lat.]

1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.

If it were not for these principles, the bodies of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton's Opticks.

Some passing into their pores, others adiering in lumps or masses to their outside, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward's Natural History.

2. A large quantity.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakspeare.
He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh.

He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army. Davies on Ireland.

3. Bulk; vast body.

The Creator of the world would not have framed to huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot.

This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shakspeare.

4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.

The whole knowledge of groups, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the light. Dryden.

At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;
They lose their forms, and make a mass.

Comus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.

Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison.

5. Gross body; the general; the bulk.

Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Boaden.

Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal Mind
Aids through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryden.

The mass of the people have seen their eyes,
and will not be governed by Clodius and Curius. Swift.

If there is not sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

6. [masse, Lat.] The service of the Romish church.

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert herein. Peacham on Drawing.

He infers, that then Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.

TO MASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.

Their massing furniture they took from the law, left having a mass and a priest, they should want vestments. Hooker.

TO MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.

They feared the French might, with silling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven. Hayward.

MASSACRE. n. f. [massacre, Fr. from mazzare, Italian.]

1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.

Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men. Milton.

Slaughter grows murder, and as it goes too far,
And makes a massacre, what was a war. Dryden.

2. Murder.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakspeare.

TO MASSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, Fr. from the noun.] To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family. Shakspeare.

Christian religion, now crumbled into fractions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not countermines us, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love. Deeny of Pity.

After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterbury.

MASSICOT. n. f. [Fr.] Corals calcined by a moderate degree of fire: of this there are three sorts, arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold coloured massicot still more. Trepan.

MA'SSINESS. n. f. [from massy, mas-

MA'SSIVENESS. n. f. [from massy, mas-

see see.] Weight; bulk;
ponderousness.

It was more notorious for the distinctness of the provision served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hales ill.

MA'SSIVE. adj. [massif, Fr.] Heavy;

MA'SSY. adj. wrightly; ponderous;
bulky; continuous.

If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine.

Government of the Tongue.

No sideboards the golden plates were peris'd,
No fleeting slaves the massive dishes dress'd. Dryden.

The more gross the massive parts of the terror.

trial glass, the beam of stone, eye their order to the foliage.

If their tinnors or glasses were so thick and mazy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye.

The intrepid Theban hears the bustling sky,
Sees yawning rocks in mazy fragments fly,
And views along'd from the hills afar.
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war. Pope.

MAST. n. f. [mist, mât, Fr. mât, Sax.]
1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That ships sail perpendicularly fallen. Shakspeare.
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden.

2. The fruit of the oak and beech. It has in this sense no plural termination.

The oaks bear mast, the briars Karlet hips;
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her tuff wels before you. Shakspeare.

Trives that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears.

When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some mast. L'Estrange.

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one; it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefits.

Wood ring dolphins at the palace ghde;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they browse,
And their broad wings are spread in the boughs. Dryden.

MASTED. adj. [from mast.] Furnished with masts.

MASTER. n. f. [meester, Dutch; maitre, Fr. magister, Lat.]

1. One who has servants: opposed to man or servant.

But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this name I myself Am your's, my lord. Shakspeare.

Take up thy master. Shakspeare.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it;
The boy, his clerk, begg'd mine;
And neither man nor master would take sight
But the two rings. Shakspeare.

2. A director; a governor.

If thou be made the master of a tent, be among them as one of the rest. Ecclijasticus.

O thou, my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet, and the song. Pope.

3. Owner; proprietor; with the idea of governing.

An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyric on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetoric in the praise of Bucephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the master. Dryden.

4. A lord; a ruler.

Wisdom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house. Guardian.

There Caesar, grac'd with both Minerva, thone, Caesar the world's great master and his own. Pope.

Exalts
The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul:
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity, and to own a master. Philips.

5. Chief; head.

Chief master-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace. Shakspeare.

As a wife master-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. 1 Corinthians.

The best sets are the heads got from the very tops of the root; the next are the runners, which spread from the master roots. Mortimer.

6. Possessor.

When I have done, my master of a hundred thousand drachms, I have miserably set myself on the foot of a prince, and will demand the grand vizir's daughter in marriage. Addison.

The duke of Savoy may make himself master of the French dominions on the other side of the Rhone. Addison.

7. Commander of a trading ship.

An unhappy master is he that is made engaging by many shipwrecks; a miserable merchant, that is neither rich nor wise, but after some bankruptcies.

A sailor's wife had chequins in her lap;
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' th' Tiger. Shakspeare.

8. One uncontrolled.

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night. Shakspeare.

Grief, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master. Shakspeare.

9. An appellation of respect.

Master doctor, you have brought those drugs.
Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king. Shakspeare.

Masters, play here, I will content your pains,
Something that's brief; and bid good morrow. Shakspeare.

10. A young gentleman.

If gaming does an aged face entice,
Then my young master twitly learns the vice. Dryden.

Master lay with his bedchamber towards the south sun; his lodg'd in a garret, exposed to the north wind. Arbuthnot.

Where there are little masters and milks in a house, they are impediments to the diversions of the servants; the remedy is to bribe them, that they may not tell tales. Swift.

11. One who teaches; a teacher: correlative to scholar or learner.

Very few men are wise by their own counsel, or learned by their own teaching; for he that was only taught by himself had a fool to his master. H. Jones.

To the Jews join the Egyptians, the first masters of learning. South.

Masters and teachers should not raise difficulties to their scholars; but smooth their way, and help them forwards. Locke.

12. A man eminently skilful in practice or science.

The great mocking master mock'd not then,
When he said, Truth was buried here below. Dar.

Spenser and Fairfax, great masters of our language, saw much farther into the beauties of our numbers than those who followed. Dryden.

A man must not only be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too; he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own. Dryden.

He that does not pretend to painting, is not touched at the commendation of a master in that profession. Collier.

No care is taken to improve young men in their own language, that they may thoroughly understand, and be masters of it. Locke.

13. A title of dignity in the universities: as, master of arts.

To MA'STER. r. a. [from the noun.]

1. To be a master to; to rule; to govern.

Ay, good faith,
And rather father thee, than master thee. Shakspeare.

2. To conquer; to overpower; to subdue.

Thrice blessed they that master to their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage. Shakspeare.

The princes of Germany did not think him sent to command the empire, who was neither able to rule his insolent subjects of England, nor master his rebellious people in Ireland. Davidson.

Then comes some third party, that masters both plaintiff and defendant, and carries away the booty. L'Estrange.

Honour burns in me, not so fiercely bright,
But pale as fire when master'd by the light. Dryden.

Obstinacy and wild neglects must be mastered, even though it cost blood. Locke.

A man can no more justly make use of another's necessity, than he that has more strength can seize upon a weaker, master him to his obedience, and, with a strong arm, subdue him to his power.

The subordination of an individual slave is a work of time and patience; civilisation must be mastered and subdued by degrees. Cabot's Sermons.

3. To execute with skill.

I do not take myself to be so perfect in the transactions and privileges of Bohemia, as to be fit to handle that part: and I will not offer at that I cannot master. Lucian.

MASTER-HAND. n. f. The hand of a man eminently skilful.

Musick resembles poetry; in each
Are nameless graces which no methods teach,
And which a master-hand alone can reach. Pope.

MASTER-JEST. n. f. Principal jest.

Who shall break the master-jest,
And what, and how, upon the rest? Hudibras.

MASTER-KEY. n. f. The key which opens many locks, of which the subordinate keys open each only one.

This master-key Fits every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.

MASTER-SINEW. n. f.

The master-sinew is a large sinew that surrounds the hough, and divides it from the bone by a hollow place, where the wind-galls are usually seated, which is the largest and most visible sinew in a horse's body; this sometimes is relaxed or strained. Farrier's Dictionary.

MASTER-STRING. n. f. Principal string.

He touch'd me
Ev'n on the tender it point; the master-string,
That makes most harmony or discord to me.
I own the glorious subject fires my breast. Rowe.

MASTER-STROKE. n. f. Capital performance.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's maze intricacies trace:
Tell how your teach has here eluded been,
How oft am'd and ravi'd you have torn
The conduct, prudence, and stupendous art,
And master-strokes in each mechanic part. Blackmore.

MASTER-TEETH. n. f. The principal teeth.

Some living creatures have their master-teeth indented one within another like laws; as lions and dogs. Bacon.

MA'STERDOM. n. f. [from master.] Dominion; rule. Not in use.

You shall put
This night's great business into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shakspeare.

MA'STERLESS. adj. [from master.]

1. Wanting a master or owner.

When all was past he took his forlorn wood,
His silver shield now idle masterless. Fairy Queen.

The foul opinion
You had of her pure honour, gains or loses
Your sword or mine; or masterless leaves both
To who shall find them. Shakspeare.

2. Ungoverned; unshuffled.

MA'STERLY. adv. With the skill of a master.

Thou dost speak masterly,
Young though thou art. Shakspeare.

I read a book; I think it very masterly written. Swift.

MA'STERLINESS. n. f. [from masterly.]

Eminent skill.

MA'STERLY. adj. [from master.]

1. Suitable to a master; artful; skilful.

As for the warmth of fancy, the masterly figures, and the copiousness of imagination, he has exceeded all others. Dryden.

That clearer strokes of masterly design,
Of wise contrivance, and of judgment thine,
In all the parts of nature, we adore,
Thine clear and highest works of human art, which
A man never discovers new beauties, or improves the act of checking.

in gentle number crowns his eyes. Dryden.
 He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
 And o'er his eye-brows hung his matted hair, Dry.

match with the inventions they presu'd easy, and of his wonder made a cure: "Biffan.
I but thought I had the countess's son."

And though his heart be great, his actions gallant,
 N 2

He wants a crown to puff against a crown
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power.
Dryden.

The shepherd's tender of Spenser is not to be mated in any modern language.
Dryden.

4. To suit; to proportion.
Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Ruse.
Mine have been still Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes.
Rouse.

Employ their wit and humour in chusing and matching of patterns and colours.
Swift.

5. To marry; to give in marriage.

Great king,
I would not from your love make such a fray,
To match you where I hate. Shakespeare.

Thou dost protect thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her for. Donne.
Them willingly they would have still retained,
And match'd with the prince. Daniel.

When a man thinks himself match'd to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast. South.

A senator of Rome, while Rome furv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king.
Addison.

TO MATCH. v. n.

1. To be married.

A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blessing to match with some heroic-minded lady. Shelley.

I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shaksp.
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep.

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.
All creatures else are thus unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryd.

2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.

1. MATCHABLE. adj. [from match.] Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.

Ye, whose high worths surpassing paragons,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none.

Why did ye stoop into so lowly state? Spenser.
Correspondent.

What a land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no where but in the deepest parts of the sea.
Woodward.

1. MATCHLESS. adj. [from match.] Having no equal.

This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious saint, a matchless queen. Waller.
Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spur shall urge thy foaming horse.
Dryden.

MATERNITY, n. f. [maternitas, Fr. maternitas, Lat.] The character or relation of a mother.

MAT-FELON, n. f. [matter, to kill, and felon, a thief.] A species of knap-weed growing wild.

MATHEMATICAL, adj. [mathematicus, Lat.] Considered according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.

The east and west
Upon the globe, a mathematick point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are all contiguous. Denham.
It is as impossible for an aggregate of lines to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to, or constitute a body. Poyle.
I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley.

MATHEMATICALLY, adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.

We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sunbeams, and is reciprocally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley.
MATHEMATICIAN, n. f. [mathematicus, Lat. mathematicien, Fr.] A man versed in the mathematics.

One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Æneas's voyage by the map. Spectator.

MATHEMATICKS, n. f. [mathematika, Gr.] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations. Harris.

The mathematicks and the metaphysics
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you. Shakespeare.

See mystery to mathematicks fly. Pope.

MATIN, adj. [matin, Fr. matutinus, Lat.] Morning; used in the morning.

Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet rung. Milton.

I waste the matin lamp in sigh, for thee:
Thy image steals between my god and me. Pope.

MATIN, n. f. Morning.

The glow-worm flees the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffable fire. Shakespeare.

MATINES, n. f. [matines, Fr.] Morning worship.

The winged choristers began
To chirp their matins. Cleveland.

By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques; the vigils are celebrated before them, and the nocturn and matins, for the saints whose reliques are. Stillingfleet.

That he should raise his mitred crest on high,
Add clap his wings, and call his family
To sacred rime; and vex th' ethereal powers
With midnight matins, at uncivil hours. Dryden.

MATREAS, n. f. [matras, Fr.] A chymical glass vessel used for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually tapered into a conical figure.

The matronly wife plucked out all the brown hairs, and the younger the white. Ayliffe.

MATROSS, n. f.

Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, spunging, firing, and loading them; they carry fire-locks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a wagon should break. Bentley.

MATTE, n. f. [matiere, Fr. matéria, Lat.]

1. Body; substance extended.

If then the soul another soul to make,
Because her power, is kept within a bound,
She must some former stuff or matter take,
But in the soul there is no matter found. Dewet.

It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportions, as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive particles being solids, are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them; even to very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Newton.

Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Watts's Logic.

2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

3. Subject; thing treated.

The subject or matter of laws in general is thus far forth constant, which matter is that for the ordering whereof laws were instituted. Hunter.

I have words to speak in thy ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the matter. Shakespeare.

Son of God, Saviour of Men! Thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my song. Milton.

It is matter of the greatest affrontment to observe the common boldness of men. Decay of Party.

I shall turn
Full fraught with joyful tidings of their works,
New matter of his praise, and of our songs. Dryd.

This is so certain in true philosophy, that it is matter of affrontment to me how it came to be doubted. Chrysos.

4. The whole; the very thing supposed.

He grants the deluge to have come for very great matter, that but very few escaped. Tinsley.

5. Affair; business; in a familiar sense.

To help the matter, the alchemists call in many vanities out of astrology. Bacon.

Matters succeeded to well with him, that every body was in admiration to see how mighty rich he was grown. Ayliffe.

Never was any thing gotten by sensuality and sloth in matter of profit or reputation. Ayliffe.

A town was reasoning the matter with a flag, why he should run away from the dogs. Ayliffe.

Some young female seems to have carried matters so far, that she is ripe for asking advice. Spectator.

If chance herself should err,
Observe how matters would miscarry. Prior.

6. Cause of disturbance.

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee? Shakespeare.

What's the matter you'difficultous request,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make your matters tell? Shakespeare.

7. Subject of suit or complaint.

Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?

—Slender, Sir, I have matter in my head against you.

If the craftsman have a matter against any man, the law is upon; let them implead one another.

In armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if tried by the gods, it would go on the other.

8. Import; consequence; importance; moment.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand I borrowed of you; but it is no matter, this poor show doth better.

And please yourselves this day;
No matter from what hands you have the play.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
No matter which, is neither of them I ye,
From sleepy Othys' top to Pilus drove his herd.

Pleas'd or displeas'd, no matter now 'tis past;
The first who dares be angry breathes his last.

9. Thing; object; that which has some particular relation, or is subject to particular consideration.

The king of Armenia had in his company three of the most famous men for matters of arms. Slid. Plato reprehended a young man for entering into a dissolute house; the young man said, Why for so small a matter? Plato replied, But custom is no small matter.

Many times the things deduced to judgment may be mean and tame, when the reason and consequence ther. of may trench to point of estate. I call matter of estate not only the parts of sovereignty but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent.

It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquit, till they be settled, are rather matters of burden than of strength.

10. Question considered.
Upon the whole matter, it is absurd to think that confidence can be kept in order without frequent examination.

11. Space or quantity nearly computed.
Away he goes to the market-town, a matter of seven miles off, to enquire if any had seen his ass.

I have thoughts to tarry a small matter in town, to learn somewhat of your lingo.

12. Purulent running; that which is formed by suppuration.

In an indurated tubercle in the great angle of the left eye, the matter being suppurated, I opened it.

13. Upon the MATTER. A low phrase now out of use. Considering the whole; with respect to the main; nearly.

In their superiors it quencheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors asleep; so that upon the matter, in a great wit deformity is an advantage to rising.

Upon the matter, in those prayers I do the same thing I did before, save only that what before I spoke without book I now read.

The elder, having consumed his whole fortune, when forced to leave his title to his younger brother, left upon the matter nothing to support it.

Waller, with Sir William Balfour, exceeded in horse, but was, upon the matter, equal in foot.

If on one side there are fair proofs, and no pretence of proof on the other, and that the difficulties are most pressing on that side which is destitute of proof, I desire to know, whether this be not upon the matter as satisfactory to a wife man as a demonstration.

To MATTER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be of importance; to import. It is used with only it, this, that, or what before it.

It matters not how they were called, so long as they were called.

If Petrarch's muse did Laura's wit resemble,
And Cowley flatter'd dear Orinda's verse;
She hopes from you—Pox take her hopes and fears,
I plead her sex's claim: what matters here? Prior.

2. To generate matter by suppuration.

Deadly wounds upward bleed, each slight sore mattereth.

The herpes beneath matter'd, and were dried up with common epuloticks?

Give me that mattock, and the wrenching iron.

2. A pickaxe.

You must dig with mattock and with spade, And pierce the inmost centre of the earth.

The Turks laboured with mattocks and pick-axes to dig up the foundation of the wall.

To destroy mountains was more to be expected from earthquakes than corrosive waters, and condemneth the judgment of Xerxes, that wrought through mount Athos with mattocks.

MATRESS. n. f. [matras, Fr. matras, Welsh.] A kind of quilt made to lie upon.

Their matresses were made of feathers and straw, and sometimes of furs from Gaul.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate With golden canopies and beds of state; But the poor patient will as soon be found On the hard matress, or the mother ground.

MATURATION. n. f. [from maturo, Lat.]

1. The state of growing ripe.

One of the causes why grains and fruits are more nourishing than leaves is, the length of time in which they grow to maturation.

There is the maturation of fruits, the maturation of drinks, and the maturation of imposthumes; as also other maturations of metals.

2. The act of ripening.

We have no heat to spare in Summer; it is very well if it be sufficient for the maturation of fruits.

3. In phisick.

Maturation, by some phisical writers, is applied to the suppuration of excrementitious or extravasated juices into matter, and differs from concoction or digestion, which is the raising to a greater perfection the alimentary and natural juices in their proper canals.

MATURATIVE. adj. [from maturo, Lat.]

1. Ripening; conducive to ripeness.

Between the tropicks and equator their second Summer is hotter, and more maturative of fruits than the former.

Where all things in common do rest,
Come feed with the pasture and mead,
Yet what doth it stand you in stead? Tupper.

A hand select from forage drives
A herd of beevies, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a meadow ground. Milton.

Paints her, 'tis true, with the same hand which spreads,

Like glorious colours, through the flow'ry meads,
Whom lavish Nature with her best attire
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire. Waller.

Yet ere to-morrow's sun shall show his head,
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy bed. Dryden.

 conversation was a mean to work the heathens conversion unto Christ. Hauker.
 It is no excuse unto him who, being drunk, com-mitteth inequity, and allegeth that his wits were not his own; in as much as himself might have chosen whether his wits should by that mean have been taken from him. Hauker.
 I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
 Out of the way, that your converse and business
 May be more free. Shakespeare.
 No place will please me so, no mean of death,
 As here by Caesar and by you cut off. Shakespeare.
 Nature is made better by no mean,
 But nature makes that mean; so over that art
 Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
 That nature makes. Shakespeare.
 5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular: the singular is in this sense now rarely used.
 The more base art thou,
 To make such means for her as thou hast done,
 And leave her on such slight conditions. Shaksp.
 By this means he had them the more at vantage, tempted and harassed with a long march. Bacon.
 Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the favour. Davies.

 veins, arteries, and integrals of the body. Hale.
 'Tis well, that while mankind
 Through fate's perverse meander errs,
 He can imagine pleasures find,
 To combat against real cares. Prior.
 While tingling rivers in meanders glide,
 They scatter verdant life on either side;
 The valleys smile, and with their flow'ry face,
 And wealthy births contend the floods embrace. Blackmore.
 Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his fun would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Focus hear his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts. Arbutnot.
 MEANDROUS. adj. [from meander.] Winding; flexuous.
 MEANING. n. f. [from mean.]

3. The sense; the thing understood.
 The meaning, all the names I call for him,
 Not of the same kind. Milton.
 These lost the sense their learning to display,
 And those explain'd the meaning of the way. Pope.
 No word more frequently in the mouths of men than confidence; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood: however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended. Swift.
 4. Sense; power of thinking.
 He was not stupid though he wrote a satire,
 For still there goes some meaning to all nature. Dryd.
 — True no meaning passes more than wit. Pope.
 MEANLY. adv. [from mean.]
 1. Moderately; not in a great degree.
 Dr. Metcalf, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly addicted to set forward learning in others. Addison.
 In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but paladising eminently flourish'd. Dryd.
 2. Without dignity; poorly.
 It was the winter wild,
 While the heav'n's born child,
 All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies. Milton.
 The Perian state will not endure a king
 So meanly born. Deuham.
 3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.
 Would you meanly thus rely
 On power, you know, I must oblige. Prior.
 4. Without respect.
 Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something desirable in them: we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts.
 MEANNESS. n. f. [from mean.]
 1. Want of excellence.
 The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, in this place as a stranger, with whom our Lord of Common Prayer hath nothing to do. Hauker.
 This figure is of a base date by the meanness of the workmanship. Addison.
 2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.
 No other nymphs have beds to mens hearts,
 But as their meanness hath hopes imports. Waller.
 Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wife to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good. South.
 3. Lowness of mind.
 The name of servants has been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South.
 4. Sordidness; niggardliness.
 MEANT, perf. and part. pass. of To mean.
 By Silvia if thy charming self be meant;
 It friend's up by thy virgin vows extent.
 O! let me in Aminta's praises join;
 Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.
 MEASE. n. f. [probably a corruption of measure; as, a mease of herrings is five hundred.] Ainsworth.
 MEASLES. n. f. [morbilli, Lat.].
 1. Measles are a critical eruption in a fever well known in the common practice. Quincy.
 My lungs
 Coin words till their decay, against those measles,
 Which we did then should better us, yet seek
 The very way to catch them. Shakespeare.
 Before the plague of London, inflammation of the lungs were rise and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbutnot.
 2. A disease of swine.
 One, when he had an unlucky old game, would needs tell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it;
 nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed; the swine died of the measles, and the sheep of the rot. Johnson's Dictionary.
 3. A disease of trees.
 Apple-trees are often infected with the measles,
 by being scorched with the sun. Morimer.

MEASLED, adj. [from measle.] Infected with the measles.

Thou vermin wretched,
As e'er in measled pork was hatched;
Thou rail of worship that dull grow
On rump of justice as of cow. Fullbrook.

MEASLY, adj. [from measle.] Scabbed with the measles.

Ist trotted forth the gon's laime,
To ease her against the stump,
And finally was heard to whine,
As she scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.

MEASURABLE, adj. [from measure.]

1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.

God's eternal duration is permanent and invisible, not measurable by time and motion, not to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley.

2. Moderate; in small quantity.

MEASURABLENESS, n. f. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.

MEASURABLY, adv. [from measurable.]

Moderately.
Wine measurably drunk, and in fesson, bringeth kindness of the heart. Eccelesiasticus.

MEASURE, n. f. [from measure, Fr. mesure, Lat.]

1. That by which any thing is measured.

A Taylor's news,
Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on stilts, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of many a thousand. Shakespeare.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capacity of any other vessel. Holder.

All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measures. Holder.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbutnot on Colins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.

He lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other men's eyes and tongues. Taylor.

God's goodness is the measure of his providence. Mora.

I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or intemperate. Glennville's Scenics.

3. Proportion; quantity settled.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hosker.

I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity; as, a measure of wine.

Be large in mirth, when we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Sufficient quantity.

I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaksf.

6. Allotment; portion allotted.

Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short
And every measure fail me. Shakespeare.

We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Corinthians.

If else thou seek it Ought, not surpassing him that measure, say. Milton.
Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid stoic, who had, by ultimate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Thomson.

7. Degree; quantity.

I have laid down, in measures, the description of the old world.

There is a great measure of wisdom to be used in the performance of civilities, so that you neither omit it when your own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.

The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and continuation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet's Theory.

8. Proportionate time; musical time.

Amysillis locates thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.

9. Motion harmonically regulated.

My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport. Shakespeare.

As when the stars in their ethereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance. Dryden.

10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.

Wooming, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and antientry. Shakespeare.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merrymetings,
Our dreadful march, a to delightful measures. Shaksf.

11. Moderation; not excess.

O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstacy;
In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit. Shakespeare.

Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isaiah.

12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is ἡμετέριον ὄριον ἀνάστα τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ

ἡμετέριον ὄριον ἀνάστα τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ
ἡμετέριον ὄριον ἀνάστα τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ

Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psalms.

13. Any thing adjusted.

Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards. Smallidge's Sermons.

14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.

I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measures, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.

The numbers themselves, though of the heroic measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pope.

15. Tune; proportionate notes.

The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-dancing feet. Spenser.

16. Mean of action; mean to an end.

The original of this phrase refers to the necessity of measuring the ground upon which any structure is to be raised, or any distant effect to be produced, as in shooting at a mark. Hence he that proportioned his means to his end was said to take right measures. By degrees measures and means were confounded, and any thing done for an end, and sometimes any transaction absolutely, is called a measure, with no more propriety than if, because an archer might be said to have taken wrong measures when his mark was beyond his reach, we should say that it was a bad measure to use a heavy arrow. His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.

17. To measure is said to be hardly treated.

To measure is said to be hardly treated. Lat.

1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Cheronæ, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow he would find it no longer than it was before his victory. Bacon.

2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.

A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shaksf.
I'll tell thee all my whole device
At the park gate; and therefore haste away.
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. Shaksf.

The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way. Dry.

3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.

Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite Thy pow'r! What thou hast measure thee, or tongue Relate thee? Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To adjust; to proportion.

To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Taylor.

Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange, that he measures the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.

5. To mark out in stated quantities.

What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Spectator.

6. To allot or distribute by measure.

With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again. Matthew.

MEASURELESS, adj. [from measure.] Infinite; immeasurable.

He shut up in measureless content. Shakespeare.

MEASUREMENT, n. f. [from measure.]

Menfuration; act of measuring.

MEASURER, n. f. [from measure.] One that measures.

MEASURING, adj. [from measure.] It is applied to a cast not to be distinguished in its length from another but by measuring.

When lusty shepherds chrow
The bar by turns, and none the ren out-go
So far, but that the best are measuring casts,
Their emulation and their pasture lulls. Waller.

MEAT, n. f. [met, French.]

1. Flesh to be eaten.

To his father he eat ten asses laden with corn, and bread, and meat for his father by the way. Genesis.

Carnivore, and birds of prey, are no good meat; but the reason is, rather the choleric nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh, for peewees and ducks feed upon it; and yet are good meat. Bacon's Natural History.

There was a multitude of excises; as, the vectigal uncelth, a tax upon meat. Arbutnot.

2. Food in general.

Never words were music to thine ear,
And never meat sweet-favour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spoke or car'd. Shakespeare.

Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both. 1 Corinthians.

MEATED, adj. [from meat.] Fed; foddered.

Strong oxen and horses, well meated and well clad,
Well meated and clad. Tupper's Husbandry.

MEATH, n. f. [medd, Welsh, unde mede, meddwl ebrius sunt.] Drink, properly of honey.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive mull, and meathes
From many a berry. Milton's Paradise Lost.

MEATHING, part. generally called mizzling.

The air feels more moist when the water is in small than is great design; inconstancy and sinking rubb, than is great summa. Arbuthnot on Air.

MECHANICAL. adj. [mechanicus, Lat.] MECHANICK. n. f. [mechanique, Fr. from μηχανη.]

1. Constructed by the laws of mechanics.
Many a fair precept in poetry, is like a seeming demonstration in mathematicks, very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanic operation. Dryden.

The main business of natural philosophy, is to argue from phenomena without feigning hypotheses, and to deduce causes from effects till we come to the very first cause, which certainly is not mechanical; and not only to unfold the mechanism of the world, but chiefly to resolve these, and such like questions. Newton.

2. Skilled in mechanics; bred to manual labour.

3. Mean; servile; of mean occupation.
Know you not, being mechanical, you ought not to walk upon a labouring day, without the sign of your profession. Shakespeare.

Hug him, mechanical fat-butcher rogue; I will stare him out of his wits; I will hew him with my cudgel. Shakespeare.

Mechanick slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view. Shakespeare.

To make a god, a hero, or a king,
Descend to a mechanick dialect. Rafcommon.

MECHANICK. n. f. A manufacturer; a low workman.

Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanicks. Shakespeare.

A third proves a very heavy philosopher, who possibly would have made a good mechanick, and have done well enough at the useful philosophy of the spade or the anvil. South.

MECHANICKS. n. f. [mechanica, Lat.] A mathematical science, which shews the effects of powers, or moving forces, so far as they are applied to engines, and demonstrates the laws of motion. Harris.
The rudiments of geography, with something of mechanicks, may be easily conveyed into the minds of acute young persons. Watts.

Salomon was a great proficient in mechanicks, and inventor of a vessel which imitated thunder.
Brown.

MECHANICALLY. adv. [from mechanick.]

According to the laws of mechanism.
They suppose even the common animals that are in being, to have been formed mechanically among the rest. Ray.

Later philosophers feign hypotheses for explaining all things mechanically, and refer other causes to metaphysics. Newton.

MECHANICALNESS. n. f. [from mechanick.]

1. Agreeableness to the laws of mechanism.

2. Meanness.

MECHANICIAN. n. f. [mechanicien, Fr.]

A man professing or studying the construction of machines.

Some were figured like male, others like female screws, as mechanicians speak. Boyle.

MECHANISM. n. f. [mechanisme, Fr.]

1. Action according to mechanic laws.

After the chyle has passed through the lungs, nature continues her usual mechanism, to convert it into animal substance. Arbuthnot.

He acknowledges nothing besides matter and motion; so that all must be performed either by mechanism or accident, either of which is wholly unaccountable. Bentley.

2. Construction of parts depending on each other in any complicated fabric.

MECHANICAL. n. f. [from the place.]

Mechacum is a large root, twelve or fourteen inches long; the plant which affords it is a species of bindweed, and its stalks are singular: the root in powder is a gentle and mild purgative. Mut.

MED. n. f. [Medicus, Lat.]

1. The first element of children.

Infants new-born have a macerum, or sort of dark-coloured excrement in the bowels. Arbuth.

MEDAL. n. f. [medaille, Fr. probably from metallum, Lat.]

1. An ancient coin.

The Roman medals were their current money:
when an action deserved to be recorded on a coin,
it was stamped, and issued out of the mint. Addison.

2. A piece stamped in honour of some remarkable performance.

MEDALLICK. adj. [from medal.] Pertaining to medals.

You will never, with all your medallick eloquence, persuade Eugenius, that it is better to have a pocketful of Othos than of Jacobuses. Addison.

MEDALLION. n. f. [medaillon, Fr.] A large antique stamp or medal.

Medallions, in respect of the other coins, were the same as modern medals in respect of modern money. Addison.

MEDALLIST. n. f. [medailliste, Fr.] A man skilled or curious in medals.

As a medallist, you are not to look upon a cabinet of medals as a treasure of money, but of knowledge. Ad.

TO MEDDLE. v. n. [middelen, Dutch.]

1. To have to do: in this sense it is always followed by with.

It is reported that cassia, when gathered, is put into the skins of beasts newly flayed, which breeding worms, they devour the pith and marrow, and to make it hollow; but meddle not with the back, because it is litter. Bacon.

With the power of it upon the spirits of men we will only meddle. Bacon's Natural History.

I have thus far been an upright judge, not meddling with the design nor disposition. Dryden.

2. To interpose; to act in any thing.

For my part, I'll not meddle nor make any farther. Shakespeare.

In every turn of state, without meddling on either side, he has always been favourable to merit. Dryd.

The civil lawyers have pretended to determine concerning the succession of princes; but, by our author's principles, have meddled in a matter that belongs not to them. Locke.

Wh' t' halt thou to do to meddle with the affairs of my family? to dispose of my estate, old boy?
Arbuthnot.

3. To interpose or intervene importunately or officiously.

Why should'st thou meddle to thy hurt? 2 Kings.
It is an honour for a man to cease from strife:
but every fool will be meddling. Proverbs.

This meddling priest longs to be found a fool.
Rome.

Let me shake off th' intrusive cares of day,
And lay the meddling senses all aside. Thomson.

TO MEDDLE. v. a. [from medler, Fr.] To mix; to mingle. Obsolete.

He that had well yond his life,
Thus meddled his talk with many a tear. Spenser.

A meddled state of the orders of the gospel, and ceremonies of popery, is not the best way to banish popery. Hobbes.

MEDDLER. n. f. [from meddle.] One who bustles himself with things in which he has no concern.

Do not drive away such as bring thee information, as meddlers, but accept of them in good part.
Bacon.

This may be applied to those that assume to themselves the merits of other men's services, meddle's, bustles, and importuners. L'Estrange.

MEDDLESOUS. adj. Intermeddling; as, a meddlesome busybody. Ainsworth.

MEDL'ASTINE. n. f. [Fr. medullinum, Lat.] The simbrated body about which the guts are convolved.

None of the membranes which invest the inside of the breast but ally to the medl'astine, the mediastine as well as the pleura. Arbuthnot.

TO MEDDIATE. v. n. [from medius, Lat.]

1. To interpose as an equal friend to both parties; to act indifferently between contending parties; to intercede.

The corruption of manners in the world, we shall find owing to some mediating ichemias that offer to comprehend the different interests of sin and religion. Rogers.

2. To be between two.

By being crowded, they exclude all other bodies that before mediated between the parts of their body. Digby.

TO MEDDIATE. v. a.

1. To effect by mediation.

The earl made many professions of his desire to interpose, and mediate a good peace between the nations. Clarendon.

I possess chemists and corpuscularians of advantages by the confederacy I am mediating between them. Boyle.

2. To limit by something in the middle.

They styled a double step, the space from the elevation of one foot to the same foot set down again, mediated by a step of the other foot, a space, equal to five feet. Holder.

MEDIATE. adj. [mediat, Fr. medius, Lat.]

1. Interposed; intervening.

Soon the mediate clouds shall be dispell'd;
The sun shall soon be face to face beheld. Prior.

2. Middle; between two extremes.

Anxious we hover in a mediate state,
Betwixt infinity and nothing. Prior.

3. Acting as a mean. Unusual.

The most important care of a new king, was his marriage, for mediate establishment of the royal line. Watts.

MEDIATELY. adv. [from mediate.] By a secondary cause; in such a manner that something acts between the first cause and the last effect.

God worketh all things amongst us mediately by secondary means; the which means of our safety being shipping and sea-forces, are to be esteemed as his guts, and then only available and beneficial when he vouchsafeth his grace to use them aright. Raleigh's Essay.

Pestilent contagion is propagated immediately by conversing with infected persons, and mediately by pestilent seminaries propagated through the air. Harvey on Consumptions.

MEDIATION. n. f. [mediation, Fr. from medius, Lat.]

1. Interposition; intervention; agency between two parties, practised by a common friend.

Some nobler taken I have kept apart
For Lavinia and Octavia, to induce Their mediation. Shakespeare.

Noble offices thou may'st effect
Of mediation, after I am dead,
Between his greatness and thy other brethren. Shakespeare.

The king sought unto them to compose their troubles between him and his subjects; they accordingly interposed their mediation in a round and princely manner. Bacon.

2. Agency interposed; intervention power.

The passions have their residence in the sensitive appetite: for inasmuch as man is a compound of soul as well as spirit, the soul, during its abode in the body, does all things by the mediation of these passions. South's Sermons.

It is utterly unexpectable, that inanimate brute matter, without the mediation of some immaterial being, should operate upon other matter without mutual contact. Bentley.

3. Intercession; entreaty for another.

MEDIATOR. n. f. [mediateur, French.]

1. One that intervenes between two parties.

You had found by experience the trouble of all mens conference, and for all matters to yourself, as a mediator between them and their sovereign. Bee.

MED

2. An intercessor; an entreator for another; one who uses his influence in favour of another.

It is against the sense of the law, to make saints or angels to be mediators between God and them.

3. One of the characters of our blessed Saviour.

A mediator is considered two ways by nature or by office, as the fathers distinguish. He is a mediator by nature, as partaking of both natures divine and human; and mediator by office, as transacting matters between God and man.

Man's friend, his mediator, his design'd, Both ransom and redeemer voluntary.

MEDIATORIAL. } adj. [from mediator.]
MEDIATORY. } Belonging to a mediator.

All other effects of Christ's mediatorial office are accounted for from the truth of his resurrection.

and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen.

The hearts and galls of plums are medicinal.

MEDICINAL. adj. [medicinalis, Lat.] This word is now commonly pronounced medicinal, with the accent on the second syllable; but more properly, and more agreeably to the best authorities, medicinal.

1. Having the power of healing; having physical virtue.

Come with words, as medicinal as true, Hot as either; to purge him of that humour That press'd him from sleep.

Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings, Mingle my apprehensive tenderest parts; Exasperate, exacerate and raise Fire inflammation, which no cooling herb Nor medicinal liquor can allunge.

The second cause took the swift command, The medicinal head, the ready hand; All but eternal doom was conquer'd by their art.

2. Belonging to physick.

Learn'd he was in medicinal lore, For by his side a pouch he wore, Replete with strange hermetick powder, That wounds nine miles point-blank with folder.

Such are call'd medicinal-days by some writers, wherein no crisis or change is expected, but to forbid it the use of medicines; but it is most properly used to those days wherein purging or any other evacuation, is more conveniently complied with.

Medicinal-hours are those wherein it is supposed that medicines may be taken, commonly reckoned in the morning fasting, about an hour before dinner, about four hours after dinner, and going to bed; but times are to be governed by the symptoms and aggravation of the distemper.

MEDICINALLY. adv. [from medicinal.] Physically.

The wauccles that leech-like lie'd on blood, Sucking for them were medicinally good.

MEDICINE. n. f. [medicina, Fr. medicina, Lat.] It is generally pronounced as if only of two syllables, med'cine. Physick; any remedy administered by a physician.

O, my dear father! reformation, hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss Repair those violent harms.

A merry heart doth good like a medicine, but a broken spirit drieth the bones.

I wish to die, yet dare not death endure; Darest the med'cine, yet desire the cure.

TO MEDICINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To affect as physick. Not used.

Not all the drowsy syrups of the world, Shall ever medicinate thee to that sweet sleep Which thou owest yesterday.

MEDIETY. n. f. [medietas, Fr. medietas, Lat.] Middle state; participation of two extremes; half.

They contained no stony composition, but were made up of man and bird; the human mediety variously placed not only above but below.

known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli.
Quincy.

2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.

I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is enulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical;
nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's,
which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politick; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shakspere.

Moonstruck madness, naming melancholy. Milton.

3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.

He protested, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him. Sidney.

left, in this point of exquisite contrivance. Bacon.

MELIORITY. n. f. [from melior.] State of being better. A word very elegant, but not used.

Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the meliority above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

cal; harmonious.

Fountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise. Mil.

And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
A music more melodious than the spheres. Dryden.

MELODIOUSLY. adv. [from melodious.]
Musically; harmoniously.

MELODIOUSNESS. n. f. [from melodious.]
Harmoniousness; musicalness.

MELODY. n. f. [melodia.] Music; a harmony of sound.

The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in music also, judging them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him a number of divinely indited poems,
and was further the author of adding unto poetry melody in public prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of men's hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God.

Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. 1. Eph. viii.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky crib,
And hush with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perturbed chambers of the great,
And toll'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shaksp.

Lend me your son, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse! Thomson's Spring.

MELON. n. f. [melon, Fr. melo, Lat.]

1. A plant.

The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three fennel apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Milner.

2. The fruit.

We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers and the melons. Numbers.

MELON-THISTLE. n. f. [melocotus, Lat.]

The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance. Milner.

monly by heat.

How they would melt, out of my face, by dawn, and liquid softness melt with me! Shak.

When the melting fire between, the fire enough to melt to hell.

That price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.

The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade. Pope.

If your butter when melted tastes of brim, it is your mother's fault, who will not allow you a silver lancepan. Swift.

2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.

To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierces the mind. Baird.

3. To soften to love or tenderness.

The mighty master smil'd to see
That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryden.

Aha! the story melts away my soul. Addison.

1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.

Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psalms.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.

I melt, and am not
Of stouger earth than others. Shakspere.

Albeit, they were best villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakspere.

This said, the mov'd assistants melt in tears. Dry.

Melting into tears, the pious man
Deplor'd to find a fight. Dryden.

3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.

Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted as breath into the wind. Shakspere.

Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. Shak.

4. To be subdued by affliction.

My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me. Psalms.

MELTER. n. f. [from melt.] One that melts metals.

Miso and Mopha, like a couple of forewat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore. Dehann.

MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.

Zelucane lay upon a bank, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought the began meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river. Sidney.

MELWEL. n. f. A kind of fish.

MEMBER. n. f. [membre, Fr. membrum, Lat.]

1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Matthew.

The tongue is a little member, and boweth great things. James.

If shape it might be call'd, that shape had none
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton.

2. A part of a discourse or period; a head;
a clause.

Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to the answer of the respondent, in which the respondent is obliged to.

3. Any part of an integral.

In poetry as in mechanism, not only the whole but the principal members, should be great. Addison.

4. One of a community.

My going to demand justice, upon the five members, my exercises loaded with obloquies. K. Charles.

Mean as I am, yet have the Mules made Ménée, a member of the tanelful trade. Dryden.

Seneca is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done service to their country. Addison.

MEMBRANE. n. f. [membrane, Fr. mem-brana, Lat.] A web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded. Quincy.

The chorion, a thick membrane obtaining the formation, the dam doth after tear asunder. Brown.

They obliterate find none
Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:
Easier than air with air, it spouts embraces,
Total they mix. Milton.

The inner membrane that involved the (supra) liquor of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.

MEMBRANACEOUS. adj. [membranaceus, MEMBRANEOUS. Fr. from mem-brana, Latin.]

Consisting of membranes.

Lute strings, which are made of the membranaceous parts of the guts, strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather. Boyle.

Great conceits are ruffled of the involution or membranaceous covering called the silty-hew. Bacon.

Such birds as are carnivorous have a muscular, or muscular, but a membranaceous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranaceous stomach. Ray.

Andryne tubulances, which take off contractions of the membranaceous parts, are diuretick. Arbuthnot.

Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs. Arbuthnot.

MEMENTO. n. f. [Lat.] A memorial notice; a hint to awaken the memory.

Our matter, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is but a man, and reasonable mementos may be useful. Bacon.

Is not the frequent spectacle of other peoples deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? L'Estrange.

MEMOIR. n. f. [memoire, Fr.]

1. An account of transactions familiarly written.

For our great master's future charge
To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs
High sciences of government and plans of war. Pride.

2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected. Arbuth.

MEMORABLE. adj. [memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.

Nothing I in much delight to recount, on the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes. Adelphy.

From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
Which all men have surviving fame to gain,
By tomb, by books, by monument made,
For the that this desire doth still remain. Daniel.

Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In sight of what he durst not once defend;
But wisely find that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands recover'd the flagging prey?

MEMORABLY, adj. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.
MEMORANDUM, n. f. [Lat.] A note to help the memory.

I resolved to save every scrap, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly.

Guardian.

Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
 We serve all o'er with old and empty rules,
 Stale memorandums of the schools.

Swift.

MEMORIAL, adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Latin.]

1. Preservative of memory.

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
 Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
 And gives memorial dainty kisses to it.

Shakespeare.

May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it.

Broome.

The tomb with many arms and trophies raise;
 There high in air memorial of my name
 Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame.

Pope.

2. Contained in memory.

The case is with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memoirs.

Watts.

MEMORIAL, n. f.

1. A monument; something to preserve memory.

Churches have names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the Trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, saint, or martyr; many of all.

Hooker.

A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord.

Numbers.

All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writing, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage.

Hale.

In other parts like deeds deserv'd
 Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought.

Mil.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation.

South.

Medals are to many monuments consigned over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost.

Addison.

2. Hint to assist the memory.

He was a prince sad, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons.

Bacon.

Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history.

Hayward.

3. An address; reminding of services and soliciting reward.

MEMORIALIST, n. f. [from memorial.] One who writes memorials.

I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memorialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord.

Spectator.

To MEMORIZE, v. a. [from memory.]

1. To record; to commit to memory by writing.

They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the same was supposed.

Speiser.

Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time; for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries.

Wotton.

2. To cause to be remembered.

To memorize another Oolgotha.

Shakespeare.

MEMORY, n. f. [from memoria, Fr. memoria, Lat.]

1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence; recollection.

Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight.

Locke.

The memory perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may subsist, when their present pasture fails.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

That ever-living man of memory,
 Henry the Fifth!

Shakespeare.

3. Time of knowledge.

Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
 How first this world, and face of things, began,
 And what before thy memory was done.

Milton.

4. Memorial; monumental record.

Be better suited:
 These weeds are memories of those woe's hours:
 I pry thee put them off.

Shakespeare.

A swan in memory of Cyclus shines;
 The mourning sisters weep in wat'ry signs.

Addison.

5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
 Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
 That memory, the warder of the brain,
 Shall be a fume.

Shakespeare.

MEN. The plural of man.

Wits live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when.

Asham.

For men, there are to be considered the valour and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldier's heart.

Bacon.

He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war.

Clarendon.

MEN-PLEASER, n. f. [men and pleaser.] One too careful to please others.

Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart.

Ephesians.

To MENACE, v. a. [menacer, Fr.] To threaten; to threaten.

Whoever knew the heavens menace?
 Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?

Shakespeare.

My master knows not but I am gone hence,
 And fearfully did menace me with death,
 If I did stay to look on his intents.

Shakespeare.

Peep'd harks that menace'd him.
 What should he do? 'Twas death to go away,
 And the god menace'd if he dar'd to stay.

Dryden.

MENACE, n. f. [menace, Fr. from the verb.] Threat.

He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last.

Brown.

The Trojans view the dusky cloud from far,
 And the dark menace of the distant war.

Dryden.

MENACER, n. f. [menaceur, Fr. from menace.] A threatener; one that threatens.

Hence menaceur! nor tempt me into rage:
 This roof protects thy rashness. But be gone!

Phil.

MENAGE, n. f. [Fr.] A collection of animals.

I saw here the largest menage that I ever met with.

Addison.

MENAGOGUE, n. f. [μενῆς and ἄγῳ.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menses.

To MEND, v. a. [emendo, Lat.]

1. To repair from breach or decay.

They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend the house.

Chronicles.

2. To correct; to alter for the better.

The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives of the persons who composed it.

Temple.

You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to mend the weakness of his constitution.

Locke.

Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
 Nay, show'd his faults—but when would poets mend?

Pope.

Thy opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended.

Swift.

3. To help; to advance.

Whatever is new is unlook'd for; and after it mends, soon, and happens; others: and he that is helped takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong.

Bacon.

If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum flans of the schools, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration.

Locke.

Though in some lands the grass is but short, yet it mends garden herbs and fruit.

Mortimer.

4. To improve; to increase.

Death comes not at call; justice divine
 Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'r, or cries.

Milton.

When upon the sands the traveller
 Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
 The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
 While death behind him covers all the place.

Dryden.

He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
 As terror had increas'd his feet with wings.

Dryden.

To MEND, v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good; to be changed for the better.

MENDABLE, adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low word.

MENDACITY, n. f. [from mendax, Lat.] Falsehood.

In this delivery there were additional mendacity; for the commandment forbid not to touch the fruit, and positively said, Ye shall surely die: but the extenuating, replied, Let ye die.

Brown.

MENDER, n. f. [from mend.] One who makes any change for the better.

What trade art thou? A trade that I may use with a safe conscience; a mender of bad souls.

Shak.

MENDICANT, adj. [mendicans, Lat.] Begging; poor to a state of beggary.

Be not righteous over-much, is applicable to those who, out of an excess of zeal, practice mortifications, whereby they macerate their bodies; or to those who voluntarily reduce themselves to a poor and mendicant state.

Fiddis.

O thou of late belov'd,

Now like a menstrual woman art remov'd. Saunders.

2. Happening to women at certain times.

Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstrual eruptions. Brown.

ME'NSTRUUM. n. s. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chymists about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]

All liquors are called menstrua which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of ingredients by infusion, decoction.

Enquire what is the proper menstruum to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrua will dissolve any metal.

White metalline bodies must be excepted, which, by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in menstrua they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent.

MENSURABILITY. n. s. [mensurabilité, Fr.] Capacity of being measured.

MENSURABLE. adj. [mensura, Lat.] Measurable; that may be measured.

We measure our time by law and not by nature. The solar month is no periodical motion, and not easily mensurable, and the months unequal among themselves, and not to be measured by even weeks or days.

MENSURAL. adj. [mensura, Lat.] Relating to measure.

To ME'NSURATE. v. a. [from mensura, Lat.] To measure; to take the dimension of any thing.

MENSURATION. n. s. [from mensura, Lat.] The act or practice of measuring; result of measuring.

After giving the mensuration and argumentation of Dr. Cumberland, it would not have been fair to have suppressed those of another prelate. Arbuthnot.

ME'NTAL. adj. [mentale, Fr. mentis, Lat.] Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power This eye shoots forth? How his imagination Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture One might interpret.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd, Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental light, That Adam now enforc'd to close his eyes, Sunk down and all his spirits became extranc'd.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that effects the palate.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them.

She kindly talk'd, at least three hours, Of plack forms, and mental pow'r.

Vol. II.

These inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and unmet ideas, being to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them.

ME'NTALLY. adv. [from mentaf.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically or externally, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body.

MENTION. n. s. [mention, Fr. mentio, Lat.]

1. Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.

Think on me when it shall be well with thee; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh.

The Almighty introduces the proposal of his laws rather with the mention of some particular acts of kindness, than by reminding mankind of his severity.

2. Curfory or incidental nomination.

Haply mention may arise

Of something not unseasonable to ask.

To ME'NTION. v. a. [mentionner, Fr. from the noun.] To write or express in words or writing.

I will mention the loving kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord.

These mentioned by their names were princes in their families.

All his transgressions shall not be mentioned.

Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire change Befall'n us, unforeseen, unthought of.

No more be mentioned then of violence Against ourselves, and wilful barrenness.

MEPHITICAL. adj. [mephitis, Lat.] Ill-favoured; stinking.

Mephitical exhalations are poisonous or noxious steams issuing out of the earth, from what cause soever.

—A mercantant, or else a pedant;

I know not what but found in apparel.

MERCANTILE. adj. Trading; commercial: relating to traders.

The expedition of the Argonauts was partly mercantile, partly military.

Let him travel and fulfil the duties of the military or mercantile life; let prosperous or adverse fortune call him to the most distant parts of the globe, still let him carry on his knowledge, and the improvement of his soul.

MERCAT. n. s. [mercatus, Lat.] Market; trade.

With irresistible majesty and authority our Saviour removed the exchange, and drove the market out of the Temple.

MERCATURE. n. s. [mercatura, Lat.] The practice of buying and selling.

MERCENARINESS. n. s. [from mercenary.] Venality; respect to hire or reward.

To forego the pleasures of sense, and undergo the hardships that attend a holy life, is such a kind of mercenariness, as none but a religious, believing soul is likely to be guilty of; if for itself, and even the fear of hell, may be one justifiable motive of mens actions.

MERCENARY. adj. [mercenaire, Fr. mercenarius, Lat.]

1. Venal; hired; sold for money.

Many of our princes, woe the while! Lie drown'd, and sink'd in mercenary blood.

Divers Almains, who served in the garrisons, being merely mercenary, did easily incline to the strongest.

2. Too studious of profit; acting only for hire.

The appellation of servant imports a necessary temper, and denotes such a man, as makes his reward both the sole motive and measure of his obedience.

'Twas not for nothing I the crown refus'd;

I still must own a mercenary maid.

MERCENARY. n. s. [mercenaire, Fr.] A hireling; one retained or serving for pay.

He a poor mercenary serves for bread;

For all his travel only cloth'd and fed.

MERCER. n. s. [mercier, Fr.] One who sells silks.

The draper and mercer may measure religion as they please, and the weaver cast her upon what loom he please.

MERCERY. n. s. [mercerie, Fr. from mercier.] Trade of mercers; traffick of silks.

The mercery is gone from out of Lombard-street and Cheapside into Waterhouse-row and Fleet-street.

The hand that ought to knit all these excellencies together is a kind mercifulness to such a one, as is in his soul devoted to such perfections.
Sidney.

Use the means ordinary and lawful, among which mercifulness and liberality is one, to which the promise of secular wealth is most frequently made.
Hammond.

MERCILESS, adj. [from mercy.] Void of mercy; pitiless; hardhearted; cruel; severe.

His mother merciless,
Most merciless of women Wyden hight,
Her other son fast sleeping did oppress,
And with most cruel hand him murdered pitiless.
Spenser.

The foe is merciless, and will not pity.
Think not their rage to desperate they'll lay
An element more merciless than they.
Denham.

What god to mean,
Be merciless a tyrant to obey!
Dryden.

Whatever ravages a merciless distemper may commit, she shall have one man as much her admirer as ever.
Pope.

The torrent merciless imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes.
Swift.

ness to spare and save; clemency; mild-ness; unwillingness to punish.

Oh Heav'n have mercy on me!
—I say, amen.
And have you mercy too?
Shakespeare.

Mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heav'n,
Upon the place beneath. It is twice bless'd;
It blest him that gives and him that takes.
Shak.

Thou, O God, art gracious, long suffering, and in mercy ordering all.
Widom.

Examples of justice must be made for terror to some; examples of mercy for comfort to others:
the one procures fear, and the other love.
Bacon.

Good Heav'n, whose darling attribute we find
Is boundless grace, and mercy to mankind,
Abhors the cruel.
Dryden.

We adore his undeserved mercy towards us, that he made us the chief of the visible creation.
Bentley.

What good condition can a treaty find
I'll part that is at mercy?
Shakespeare.

The most authentic record of so ancient a family should lie at the mercy of every infant who flings a bone.
Pope.

A lover is ever complaining of cruelty while any thing is denied him; and when the lady ceases to be cruel, there, from the next moment, at his mercy.
Swift.

MERCY-SEAT, n. f. [mercy and seat.] The mercy-seat was the covering of the ark of the covenant, in which the tables of the law were deposited: it was of gold, and at its two ends were fixed the two cherubim, of the same metal, which with their wings extended forwards, seemed to form a throne for the majesty of God, who in Scripture is represented as sitting between the cherubim, and the ark was his footstool: it was from hence that God gave his oracles to Moses, or to the high priest that consulted him.
Cabnet.

Make a mercy-seat of pure gold.
Exodus.

MERE, adj. [merus, Lat.] That or this

The mathematics and the metaphysicks,
Fail to them as you find your stomach serves you.

Call her the metaphysicks of her sex,
And say the tortures with as quaint a vex Physicians.

It might be caused by intromission, or receiving it, the form of contrary species should be received simultaneously together, which, how absurd it is, Aristotle shows in his metaphysicks.

See physick beg the Stagyrite's defence!

See metaphysicks call for aid on logic!

The topics of ontology or metaphysicks, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and figure.

METAPLASM. n. f. [μεταπλάσμος.] A figure in rhetoric, wherein words or letters are transposed contrary to their natural order.

METASTASIS. n. f. [μεταστάσις.] Translation or removal.

The disease was a dangerous asthma; the cause a metastasis, or translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs.

METATARSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones, may be carious; in which case cut out only so much of the foot as is diseased.

METATARSUS. n. f. [μέτα and τάρσος.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus.

METATHESIS. n. f. [μεταθεσις.] A transposition.

TO METE. v. a. [metior, Lat.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth.

MET

To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure wherewith to mete it.

Though you many ways pursue
To find their length, you'll never mete the true,
But thus; take all that space the sun

Mete out, when every daily round is run. Creech.

METEWAND. } n. f. [mete and wand, or METEYARD.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

A true touchstone, a sure metewand lieth before their eyes.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in meteyards, in weight, or in measure.

TO METEMPYCHOSE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To translate from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of sufferers after their death, I mean affirm to be metempsychosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones.

METEMPYCHOSIS. n. f. [μετεμψύχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto then human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan.

METEOR. n. f. [meteoire, Fr. météore.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature.

Look'd he of red, or pale, or tad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in his state,
Of his be it's meteoire tilting in his face?

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star multirise upon the horizon of Ireland, for there had the like meteor strong influence before.

These burning fits but meteoires be,
Whole matter in thee soon is spent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament.

Then flaming meteoires, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene.

Why was I said the meteor of the world,
Hung in the fires, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar?

O poet thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat too high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rave, and die.

METEOROLOGICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Others are considerable in meteorological divinity.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be new come guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies.

METEOROLOGIST. n. f. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorology's objective, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creature, there is a notable correspondence.

METEOROLOGY. n. f. [μετεωρα and λόγος.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather.

METEOROUS. adj. [from metior.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er hill
To their fix station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gilding meteoires, as evening mist Rise from a river.

METER. n. f. [from mete.] A measurer; as, a coat-meter, a land-meter.

METHYGLIN. n. f. [meddyglyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, to glue, Minshew; or meddyg, a physician, and glyn, drink, because it is a medicinal drink.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

MET

White-banded madness, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.

—Nay then two teys; and if you grow to nice,
Methyglin, wort, and malady.

To ally the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new methyglin join.

METHINKS. verb. imperfect. [me and thinks.] This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I. I think; it seems to me; methinks. See MEANS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used likewise methinks.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praise of the good and virtuous.

It he choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her.

Methinks already I your tears survey.

METHOD. n. f. [methode, Fr. méthode.] The placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end.

To be wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it springs, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill, the study whereof is full of toil; and the practice beset with difficulties.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your discourse to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your face.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain.

METHODICAL. adj. [methodique, Fr. from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author.

Let me appear, great sir, I pray,
Methodical in what I say.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories.

METHODICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

To begin methodically, I should upon you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object.

All the rules of painting are methodical, concisely, and clearly delivered in the treatise.

TO METHODIS. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolved his unique vengeance to defer,
The royal spy retold again and o'er,
To breed in terror on his gather'd spleen,
And methodic revenge.

The man who does not know how to methodise his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodised and explained, in the works of a good critic.

Those tales of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodis'd. Pope
METHODIST. n. f. [from method.]

1. A physician who practices by theory.
Our wisest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and disorders. Boyle.

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, the preterit of methinks.
[See METHINKS and MISEEMS.] I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has methinked, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from meseems.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat hailing at his cruel prey. Shakspere.
Since I thought

By pray'r th' offended deity t' appease;
Kneel'd, and before him humbly'd all my heart,
Methought, I saw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: perfum'd in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd
Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, "That thy feed shall bruise our foe." Milton.

In these
I found not what, methought, I wanted still, Milton.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden.

METONYMICAL. adj. [from metonymy.]
Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY. adv. [from metonymi- cal.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle.

METONYMY. n. f. [metonymie, Fr.
μετωνυμία.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the materiate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which, by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson.

METOPSCOPY. n. f. [metoposcopia, Fr.
μετωπιοσκόπια and σκόπος.] The study of phy-siognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

METRE. n. f. [metrum, Lat. μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose.
Aphem's Schoolmaster.

Abuse the city's best good men in metre,
To laugh at lords. Pope.

METRICAL. adj. [metricus, Lat. metrique,
French.]

1. Pertaining to metre or numbers.
2. Consisting of verses; as, metrical precepts.

METROPOLIS. n. f. [metropolis, Lat.
metropole, Fr. μέτρον and πολις.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renowned metropolis,
With glitt'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milt.
Reduc'd in careful watch

Round their metropole. Milton's Paradise Lost.
We stopped at Pavia, that was once the metro- polis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town.
Addison on Italy.

METROPOLITAN. n. f. [metropolitanus, Lat.] A bishop of the mother church;
an archbishop.

He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.

METROPOLITAN. adj. Belonging to a metropolis.

Then patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forsaken to meditate metropolitan bishops. Raleigh.

METROPOLITICAL. adj. [from metropolis.]
Chief or principal of cities.

He bearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolitcal city of Syria. Knox.

METTLE. n. f. [corrupted from metel, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]

1. Spirit; spiriteliness; courage.

What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?
He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shaksp.

I had rather go with six priests than six knights: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shaksp.
Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the tedious. Hayward's Edward VI.

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.

'Tis more to guide than spur the mule's speed,
Refrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courier, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope.

2. Substance: this at least should be metel.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shaksp.

METTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and mettel'd dance
Saw you never. Ben Jonson.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettel'd floods, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.

METTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.]
Spiritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy;

fiery; courageous.

Their force differs fr. m true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Tatler.

METTLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.]
With spiriteliness.

MEW. n. f. [meue, French.]

1. A cage; an enclosure; a place where any thing is confined.

Forth-coming from her darksome meu,
Where the all day did hide her hated mew. Spenser.

There then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly mis-shapes with ugly fights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron meus,
And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shows. Spenser.

Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dusty needle or nice thread;
She hated chambers, closets, secret meus,
And in broad fields prefer'd her maidenhead. Fair.

2. [unap, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.

Among the first sort we reckon coots, sandelugs, and meus. Carew.

The vessel sucks, and shows her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the meus in triumph ride. Dryden.

To Mew. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to enclose.

He in dark corners mew'd,
Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd. Hub.

Why should you fears, which, as they say attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman. Shakspere.

Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice.

You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakspere.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shaksp.
Feign them sick,

Close mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air. Dryd.
It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Lacke.

2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.

I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their ayres, mewings, casting, and renovation of their feathers. Walton.

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty deslac'd the royal stump. Cleaveland.
Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length

With travel weary, unsupply'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,
Sabe in fields afford her needful rest. Dryden.

3. [mauler, Fr.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. Shaksp.

They are not improvable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew.

To MOWL. v. n. [mauler, Fr.] To squall
as a child.

The infant
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms. Shaksp.

MEEZEKON. n. f. A species of sponge laurel.

Meezekon is common in our gardens, and on the Alps and Pyrenean mountains: every part of this shrub is acrid and pungent, and inflames the mouth and throat. Hull.

MEZZOTINTO. n. f. [Italian.] A kind of graving, so named as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half-painted: it is done by beating the whole into asperity with a hammer, and then rubbing it down with a stone to the resemblance intended.

MEYNT. adv. Mingled. Obsolete.

The salt Medyway, that trickling streams
Adown the dale of Kent.

Till with the elder brother Thames
His brackish waves be meint. Spenser.

MISM. n. f. [from μαίωμαι, inquino, to infect.] Such particles or atoms as are supposed to arise from disintegrated, put-rifying, or poisonous bodies, and to affect people at a distance.

The plague is a malignant fever, caused through pestilential miasms insinuating into the humoral and consistent parts of the body. Harvey.

MICE. The plural of mouse.

Mice that mar the land. 1 Samuel.

MICHAELMASS. n. f. [Michael and mass.]
The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twenty-ninth of September.

They compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmass for thirty pounds price. Carew.

To MICHE. v. n. To be secret or covered;
to lie hid. Hammer.

Marry this is micching malicho; it means micthick.
Shakspere.

MICHER. n. f. [from miche.] A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of sight;
a hedge-creeper. Mich or mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow. It is used in the western counties for a truant boy.

M I D

How tenderly her tender hands between
In ivory cage the did the midcher bind. Sidney.
Shall the blessed fof of heav'n prove a midcher,
and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked.
Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purfes? a question to be asked. Shakespeare.
MICKLE. adj. [mickel, Sax.] Much; great.
Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced muckle.

This route is rife that oftentime
Great cumburs fall unfot:
In humble dales is footing fait,
The trode is not to fickle,
And though one fall through heedlefs hafte,
Yet is his mifs not mickle. Spenser.
Many a little makes a mickle. Camden.
If I to-day die not with Frenchmens rage,
To-morrow I fhall die with mickle age. Shaksp.
O, mickle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, ftones, and their true qualities. Shakspere.

All this tract that fronts the falling fun,
A noble peer, of mickle truff and power,
Has in his charge. Milton.

MICROCO'SM. n. f. [μικροσμος and κόσμος.] The little world. Man is called as being imagined, by some fanciful philofophers, to have in him fomething analogous to the four elements.

You fee this in the map of my microcofm. Shak.
She to whom this world muft itfelf refer,
As fuburbs, or the microcofm of her;
She, fhc is dead; fhc's dead, when thou know'ft
this.

Thou know'ft how lame a creature this world is. Don.
As in this our microcofm, the heart
Heat, fpirit, motions gives to every part;
So Rome's victorious influence did difperfe
All her own virtues through the univerfe. Denham.

Philofophers fay, that man is a microcofm, or little world, refembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politic. Suiff.

MICROGRAPHY. n. f. [μικρος and γραφω.] The defcription of the parts of fuch very fmall objects as are difcernible only with a microfcope.

The honey bag is the ftomach, which they always fill to fatify and to fpare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept againft winter; a curious defcription and figure of the fting fee in Mr.
Hook's micrography. Crow.

MICROMETER. n. f. [μικρος and μετρον.] An inftrument contrived to meafure fmall fpaces.

MICROSCOPE. n. f. [μικρος and σκοπος.] microfcop, Fr.] An optick inftrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwife be feen.

If the eye were fo acute as to rival the finelt microfcop, and to difcern the finelt hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curfe, and not a bleffing to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed, the moft finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the fight of our own face, would wrought us, the fmootheft fkin would be beft all over with rugged fcales and briftly hairs. Bentley.

The crutick eye, that microfcop of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad.

MICROSCOPICAL. } adj. [from microfcop.]

MICROSCOPICK. } adj. [from microfcop.]

1. Made by a microfcope.
Make microfcopical obfervations of the figure and bulk of the confluent parts of all humors. Arbutnot.

2. Affifted by a microfcope.
Fandng even the microfcop eye
Full nature feams with life. Thomfon.

3. Refembling a microfcope.
Why has not man a microfcopick eye?
For this plain reafon, Man is not a fly;
Say what the ufe, were finer opticks given,
T'infpect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]

M I D

Is to the middle leg in prifon. Hudibras

2. The time that paffes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.

The caufes and defigns of an action are the beginning; the effects of thofe caufes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of thofe defigns, are the middle; and the unravelling and refolution of thefe difficulties are the end. Locke.

MIDDLE-AGED. adj. [middle and age.] Placed about the middle of life.

A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown, took a fancy to marry two wives. Elkan.
The middle-aged fupport (afting the beft, becaufe of the only parts abounding in the blood. Arbutnot.
I found you a very young man, and left you a middle-aged one; you knew me a middle-aged man, and now I am an old one. Swift.

MID'DLEMOST. adj. [from middle.] Being in the middle.

Why have not fome beafts more than four feet, fuppose fix, and the middlemoft shorter than the reft? Merr.

The outmoft fringe vanifhed firft and the middle-moft next, and the innermoft laft. Newton.

the leg.

He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white fatten, folele coats to the midleg, and flockings of white ilk. Bacon.

MID'MOST. adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemoft; this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they feem to have a fuperlative degree.]
Middle.

Now van to van the foremoft fquadrons meet,
The midmoft battles hafting up behind. Dryden.

Hear him! If repine

At fate's unequal laws; and at the elme,

Which, as a relict in length, the midmoft filer draws. Dryden.

What dulnefs dropt among her fons impreff,

I like motion, from one circle to the reft;

So from the midmoft of the motion fpreads

Round, and more round o'er all the fea of heads. Pope.

MIDNIGHT. n. f. [mid and night.] Milton feems to have accented the laft fyllable.]

The noon of night; the depth of night;
twelve at my ht.

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early, fo that to go to bed after midnight, is to go betimes. Shakspere.

By night he fled, and at midnight returned
From combating the earth, cautious of day. Mil.

After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the counfels were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had paff. Stillingfleet.

In all the dark midnight of popery there were fome glimmers of light, fome windows that were to give light, ay to the truth. Atterbury.

They that wait upon the dog-ftar had at midnight or midnight in Rome when Julius Cæfar was flain. Watts.

MIDNIGHT. adj. Being in the middle of the night.

tries flourish in myfterious and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects. Bacon.

Some solitary cloister will I chuse,
 Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep,
 Broke by the melancholy midnight bell. Dryden.
MIDRIFT. n. f. [midbrife, Sax.] The diaphragm.

The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities; the thorax and abdomen: it is composed of two muscles, the first and superior of these arises from the sternum, and the ends of the last ribs on each side. The second and inferior muscle comes from the vertebrae of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right side comes from the first, second, and third vertebrae of the loins; that on the left side is somewhat shorter; and both these productions join and make the lower part of the midriff. Quincy.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
 Smote him into the midriff with a stone
 That beat out life. Milton.

In the gullet where it perforateth the midriff, the carnosous fibres of that muscular part are inserted. Rap.

 diterranean sea.

Our Tyrrhene Pharos, that the mid-sea meets
 With its embrace, and leaves the land behind. D. n.

MIDSHIPMAN. n. f. [from mid, ship, and
man.]

Midshipmen are officers aboard a ship, whose station is some on the quarter-deck, others on the poop.
 Their business is to mind the braces, to look out,
 and to give about the word of command from the captain and other superior officers: they also assist on all occasions, both in sailing the ship, and in storing and rummaging the hold. Harris.

MIDST. n. f. Middle.

All is well when nothing pleases but God, being thankful in the midst of his afflictions. Taylor.

Arise, ye subtle spirits, that can spy
 When love is enter'd in a female's eye;
 You that can read it in the midst of doubt,
 And in the midst of frowns can find it out. Dryd.

MIDST. adj. [contracted from midst, the superlative of mid.] Midmost; being in the middle.

On earth join all ye creatures to extol
 Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end. Milton.

In the Slighted Maid, there is nothing in the first act but what might have been said or done in the sixth; nor any thing in the midst which might not have been placed in the beginning. Dryden.

MIDSTREAM. n. f. [mid and stream.]

 publick affairs may be while I am now writing, they may become criminal enough to bring me into trouble before midsummer. Swift.

At eve last midsummer no sleep I fought.
MIDWAY. n. f. [mid and way.] The part of the way equally distant from the beginning and end.

No midway 'twixt these extremes at all. Shaksp.
 He were an excellent man that were made in the midway between him and Benedick; the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling. Shak.

Pity and shame! that they, who to live well stood so far, should turn aside to tread Paths indirect, or in the midway slant! Milton.

The hare laid himself down about midway, and took a nap;—for I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

How didst thou arrive at this place of darkness, when so many rivers of the ocean lie in the mid- way. Broome.

MIDWAY. adj. Being in the middle between two places.

How fearful
 And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!
 The crows and choughs that wing the midway air,
 Shew scarce to gross as beetles. Shaksp.

MIDWAY. adv. In the middle of the passage.

With dry eyes, and with an open look,
 She met his glance midway. Dryden.

MIDWIFE. n. f. [This is derived both by Skinner and Junius, from mid or meed, a reward, and pip, Sax.] A woman who assists women in childbirth.

When man doth die, our body, as the womb,
 And, as a midwife, death direct's its home. Donne.
 Without a midwife these their throws sustain,
 And bowing, bring their issue forth with pain. Sund.

There saw I how the secret felon wrought,
 And treason lub'ring in the traitor's thought,
 And midwife time the open'd plot to murder brought. Dryden.

I had as clear a notion of the relation of brothers between them, as if I had all the skill of a midwife. Locke.

But no man, sure! e'er left his house
 And tadd'd Ball with thoughts so wild,
 To bring a midwife to his spouse.

Before he knew she was with child. Prior.

MIDWIFERY. n. f. [from midwife.]

1. Assistance given at childbirth.
 2. Trade of a midwife.

3. Act of production; help to production;
 co-operation in production.

So hasty fruits, and too ambitious flow'rs,
 Scorning the midwifery of rip'ning flow'rs,
 In spite of frosts, spring from the unwilling earth. Stepney.

There was never any thing propounded for publick good, that did not meet with opposition; arising from the humour of such as would have nothing brought into the world but by their own midwifery. Child.

MIDWINTER. n. f. [mid and winter.]
 The winter solstice; December the twenty-first.

Matters of such consequence should be in plain words, as little liable as might be to doubt. Locke.

MIGHT. n. f. [*migh*t, Saxon.] Power; strength; force.

What so strong,
 But wanting rest, will also want of might. Spenser.

Quoth she, great grief will not be told,
 And can more easily be thought than said;
 Right so, quoth he, but he that never would,
 Could never, will to might gives greatest aid. Spencer.

An oath of mickle might. Shaksp.
 Wherefore should not strength and might
 There fail, where virtue fails. Milton.

MIGHT and main. Utmost force; highest degree of strength.

With might and main they chae'd the murr'rous fox, Dryden.

With brazen trumpets and inflated box,
 This privilege the clergy in England formerly contended for with all might and main. Ayliffe.

MIGHTILY. adv. [from might.]

1. With great power; powerfully; effica-ciously; forcibly.

With whom ordinary means will prevail, surely the power of the word of God, even without the help of interpreters, in God's church worketh mightily, not unto their confirmation alone which are converted,
 but also to their conversion which are not. Hooker.

2. Vehemently; vigorously; violently.
 Do as adversaries do in law, drive mightily, but eat and drink as friends. Shaksp.

3. In a great degree; very much. This is a sense scarcely to be admitted but in low language.

Thereto thou wrong'st thy children mightily.
Shaksp.

There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a knave,
 That mightily deceives you. Shaksp.

An ass and an ape conferring on grievances:
 the ass complained mightily for want of horns, and the ape for want of a tail. L'Estrange.

These happening nearer home made so lasting impressions upon their minds, that the tradition of the old deluge was mightily obscured, and the circumstances of it interwoven and confounded with those of these later deluges. Woodward.

I was mightily pleased with a story applicable to this piece of philosophy. Spectator.

MIGHTINESS. n. f. [from might.] Power;
 greatness; height of dignity.

Think you for thee great,
 And follow'd with gen'ral throng and sweet
 Of thousand friends; then in a moment for,
 How soon this mightiness meets misery. Shaksp.
 Will't please your mightiness to wash your hands?
Shaksp.

In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
The instant burst of clamour that the maid,
Would have made milk the burning eyes of heav'n.

The best mixtures of water in ponds for cattle, to make them more milk, fatten, or keep them from murrain, may be chalk and nitre.

Not above fifty-one have been starved, excepting infants at nurse, caused rather by carelessness and infirmity of the milk women.

With the turneps they feed sheep, milk-cows, or fatten cattle.

MILD, adj. [milb, Sax.]

1. Kind; tender; good; indulgent; merciful; compassionate; clement; soft; not severe; not cruel.

The execution of justice is committed to his judges, which is the severest part; but the milder part, which is mercy, is wholly left in the king.

If that mild and gentle god thou be,
Who dost mankind below with pity see.
It teaches us to adore him as a mild and merciful being, of infinite love to his creatures.

2. Soft; gentle; not violent.

The rosy morn renews her light,
And milder glory to the noon.

Nothing reserv'd or fullen was to see,
But sweet regards, and pleading sanctity;
Mild was his accent, and his action free.

Sylvia's like autumn ripe, yet mild as May,
More bright than noon, yet fresh as early day.
The folding gates diffus'd a silver light,
And with a milder gleam refresh'd the fight.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
N't knowing which was mild or stale.

MILDEW, n. f. [milbeape, Sax.]

Mildew is a disease in plants, caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils the plant: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the spring and summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun nor wind. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the east, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are induced thereto.

Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words.
The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh.

VOL. II.

Soon blasting mildews blacken'd all the grain.

TO MILDEW, v. a. To taint with mildew.

Here is your husband, like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother.

His mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creatures of the earth.

MILITANT, adj. [militans, Lat. militante, French.]

1. Fighting; prosecuting the business of a soldier.

Against foul fiends they aid us militant;
They for us fight; they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant.

2. Engaged in warfare with hell and the word. A term applied to the church of Christ on earth, as opposed to the church triumphant.

Then are the publick duties of religion best ordered, when the militant church doth resemble, by sensible means, that hidden dignity and glory wherewith the church triumphant in heaven is beautified.

The state of a christian in this world is frequently compared to a warfare: and this allusion has appeared so just, that the character of militant has obtained, as the common distinction of that part of Christ's church appearing here in this world, from that part of the family at rest.

MILITAR, adj. [militaria, Lat. militaire, French. Militar, is now wholly out of use.]

1. Engaged in the life of a soldier; soldierly.

He will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world.

You are much more aſk for want of wiſdom,
Than proud for haughty mildneſs. Shakespeare.

MILKY-WAY. n. f. [milky and way.]

The galaxy.

The milkway, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itſelf in ſome places with a double path, but for the moſt part with a ſingle one. Some of the ancients, as Ariſtotle, imagined that this path conſiſted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the teleſcopical obſervations of this age, it hath been diſcovered to conſiſt of an innumerable quantity of fixed ſtars, different in ſituation and magnitude, from the conſtated mixture of which lights whoſe colour is ſuppoſed to be occaſioned. Harris.

Nor need we with a prying eye ſurvey
The diſtant ſkies to find the milky-way.

It ſorely intrudes upon our ſight. Creech.

How many ſtars there muſt be, a naked eye may give us ſome faint ſmuple, but much more a good teleſcope, directed towards that region of the ſky called the milky-way. Cheſne.

towards justices of peace, that they should duly execute their office, inviting complaints against them. Bacon.

To MINCE. v. a. [contracted, as it seems,
from minish, or from mincer; mince, Fr.
finall.]

1. To cut into very small parts.

She saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs. Shakespeare.

With a good chopping knife mince the two capons as small as ordinary minced meat. Bacon.

What means the service of the church so imperfectly, and by halves read over? What makes them mince and mangle that in their practice, which they could swallow whole in their subscriptions? South.

But murder first, and mince them all to bits. Dunciad.

2. To mention any thing scrupulously, by a little at a time; to palliate; to extenuate.

I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say I love you. Iago.

Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Calisto. Shakespeare.

Saving your mincing, the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive;
If you might please to stretch it. Shakespeare.

I'll try to force you to your duty:
For so it is, how'er you mince it,
Ere we part, I shall evince it. Hudibras.

Siren; now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase.

Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

If, to mince his meaning, had either omitted some part of what he said, or taken from the strength of his expression, I certainly had wronged him. Dry.

These, seeing no where water enough to effect a general deluge, were forced to mince the matter, and make only a partial one of it, restraining it to Asia. Woodward.

3. To speak with affected softness; to clip the words.

Hold you fast, and hold you fast between her forks preface; show that modest virtue, and do not shake the head to hear of pleasure's name. Shakespeare.

To MINCE. v. n.

1. To walk nicely by short steps; to act with appearance of scrupulousness and delicacy; to affect nicely.

By her side did sit the bold Sunday,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy. F. Queen.

I'll turn two mincing tips
Into a manly stride. Shakespeare.

A harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye. Dunciad.

2. To speak small and imperfectly.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are as much distinguished from each other, as the mincing lady priores and the broad-speaking wife of Bath. Dryden.

MIXINGLY. adv. [from mince.] In small parts; not fully.

Justice requirith nothing mincingly, but all with puffed and heaped, and even over-enlarged measure. Hooker.

MIND. n. f. [geminb, Sax.]

1. The intelligent power.

I am a very tooth-sound old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakespeare.

This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding: which word, mind, we use also for opinion; as, I am of this or that mind; and sometimes for mens conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake:
sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse; sometimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences; but as it is used in the proper sig-nification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object, or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be directed as eternal from that which is mortal. Railigh.

I thought th' eternal Mind
Had made us matters. Dryden.

2. Intellectual capacity.

We say that learning's endless, and blame fate
For not allowing life a longer date,
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
He found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

3. Liking; choice; inclination; propension; affection.

Our question is, Whether all be sin which is done without direction by Scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time sin, by following their own minds without asking counsel of God? Hooker.

We will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our mind. Shak.

Being to hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Shakespeare.

I will have nothing else but only this;
And now we think I have a mind to it. Shakespeare.

He of the same mind one toward another. Rom.

Hadst thou a wife after thy mind? forsake her not. Ecclesiasticus.

They had a mind to French Britain, but they have left full their bit. Bacon.

Sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let the occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton.

Waller coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.

He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.

All the arguments to a good life will be very insufficient to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson.

Suppose that after eight years peace he had a mind

M I N

to injure any of his friends, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make? Addy.

4. Thoughts; sentiments.

The ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind express,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

5. Opinion.

The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose, as fearing you, it shook. Shakespeare.
These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter extended with infinite space. Locke.

The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Graville.

6. Memory; remembrance.

The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will there in fet
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton.

These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Mendacious has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path thence it was out of mind. Dryden.
They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury.

A wholesome law time out of mind,
Had been confirm'd by fate's decree. Suvt.

TO MIND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark; to attend.

His mournful plight is swallowed up unawares,
Forgetful of his own that minds another's care. Enry Queen.

Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoys,
That I should mind thee oft, and mind thou me! Milton.

If, in the raving of a frantic muse,
And *mind*ing more his verses than his way,
Any of these should drop into a well. Rowcommon.

Cease to request me; let us mind our way;
Another song requires another day. Dryden.

He is daily called upon by the word, the numbers, and inward suggestions of the Holy Spirit, to attend to those prospects, and mind the things that belong to his peace. Rogers.

2. To put in mind; to remind.

Let me be punished, that have *mind*ed you
Of what you should forget. Shakespeare.

I desire to mind those persons of St. Austin. Barnet.

This *mind*s me of a cobbling colonel. Leffrange.

I shall only mind him that the contrary supposition, if it could be proved, is of little use. Locke.

TO MIND. v. n. To incline; to be disposed.

When one of them *mind*eth to go into rebellion,
he will convey away all his lordships to scoffers in trust. Spenser.

MIND'ED. adj. [from mind.]

1. Disposed; inclined; affected.

We come to know
How you stand *mind*ed in the weighty difference Between the king and you. Shakespeare.

Whole fellowship therefore meet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be to *mind*ed still. Shakespeare.

If men were *mind*ed to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design, but very much for its advancement. Tillotson.

Pyrrhus is only *mind*ed, and I am
Would live to thank him. Philips.

2. *Mind*ed is used in compounds: as, high-*mind*ed.

I am not high-*mind*ed, I have no proud looks. Psalms.

3. We say likewise low-*mind*ed.

MINDFUL. adj. [from mind and full.] Attentively; heedful; having memory.

I acknowledge the usefulness of your directions, and I promise you to be *mind*ful of your admonitions. Hammoul.

MINDFULLY. adv. [from mindful.] Attentively; heedfully.

MINDFULNESS. n. f. [from mindful.] Attention; regard.

MINDLESS. adj. [from mind.]

1. Inattentive; regardless.

Curst Athens, *mind*less of thy worth,
Forget how thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them. Shak.

As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
*Mind*less of warlike rage, and holie care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.

2. Not endued with a mind; having no intellectual powers.

God first made angels bodiless, pure minds;
Then other things, which *mind*less bodies be:
Last, he made man. Davies.

3. Stupid; unthinking.

Pronounce thee a grovelling, a *mind*less slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer. Shakespeare.

MIND-STRIKEN. adj. [from mind and stricken.]

Moved; affected in his mind.

He had been to mind-stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney.

MIN. pronoun possessive. [from my, Sax. mein, German; mein, Fr. meus, Lat. It was anciently the practice to use my before a consonant, and mine before a vowel, which euphony still requires to be observed. Mine is always used when the substantive precedes: as, this is my cat;
this cat is mine.] Belonging to me.

Thou art a cat in his, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do stand like molten lead. Shakespeare.

When a wife man gives thee better counsel,
give me mine again. Shakespeare.

It thou be'th plain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shakespeare.

nothing to set before him. Luke.

That palm is mine. Dryden.

MINE. n. f. [from mine, Fr. mine or min, Welsh, from maen lapis, in the plural
meini.]

1. A place or cavern in the earth which contains metals or minerals.

Though freighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Wall.

A workman, to avoid idleness, worked in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which was little esteemed. Boyle.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem, which he knows not what to make of. Boyle.

The heedless mine-man aims only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible. Boyle.

2. A cavern dug under any fortification that it may sink for want of support; or, in modern war, that powder may be lodged in it, which being fired at a proper time, whatever is over it may be blown up and destroyed.

By what eclipse shall that sun be defaced?
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower?
What fairer hath such a faint disgrace? Sid.

Build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down, and fill up the mines that you have digged. White.

Others to a city strong
Lay siege, encamped; by battery, scale and mine, Assaulting. Milton.

TO MINE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dig mines or burrows; to form any hollows underground.

The ranging flock in stately beeches dwells;
The climbing goats on hills securely feed;
The mining coney strowed in rocky cells. Wotton.

Of this various matter the terrestrial globe consists from its surface to the greatest depth we ever dig or mine. Woodward.

TO MINE. v. a. To sap; to ruin by mines;
to destroy by slow degrees, or secret means.

It will bat skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption, mixing all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth; but the citizens made a counter-mine. Hayward.

MINER. n. f. [from mineur, Fr. from mine.]

1. One who digs for metals.

By me kings' palaces are path'd to ground,
And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found. Dryden.

2. One who makes military mines.

As the bombardier levels his mischief at cities, the miner buies himself in running private houses. Tat.

MINERAL. n. f. [from mineral, Lat.] Fossil body; matter dug out of mines. All metals are minerals, but all minerals are not metals. Minerals in the restrained sense are bodies that may be melted, but not malleated.

She did confess, she had
For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and ling'ring
By inches waste you. Shakespeare.

The minerals of the kingdom, of lead, iron, copper, and tin, are of great value. Bacon.

Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.

Minerals; nitre with vitriol; common salt with alum; and sulphur with vitriol. Woodward.

MINERAL. adj. Consisting of fossil bodies.

By experience upon bodies in any mine, a man may conjecture at the metallick or mineral ingredients of any mass found there. Woodward.

MINERALIST. n. f. [from mineral.] One skilled or employed in minerals.

A mine-digger may meet with a gem, or a mineral, which he knows not what to make of till he shows it a jeweller or a mineralist. Boyle.

The metals and minerals which are lodged in the perpendicular intervals do still grow, to speak in the mineralist's phrase, or receive additional increase. Woodward.

MINERALOGIST. n. f. [from mineralogic, Fr.
from mineral and logos.] One who discusses on minerals.

Many authors deny it, and the exactest minera- logists have rejected it. Brown.

MINERALOGY. n. f. [from mineral and logos.] The doctrine of minerals.

MINIVER. n. f. A skin with specks of white. Ainsworth.

TO MINGLE. v. a.

1. To mix; to join; to compound; to unite with something to as to make one mass.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with subtle art, Concocted and adulter'd, they reduc'd
To blackest grain. Milton.

Lament with me! with me your sorrows join,
And mingle your united tears with mine! Walsh.

Our sex, or kindred, our houses, and our very names, we are ready to mingle with ourselves, and cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts.

2. To contaminate; to make of dissimilar parts.

To confound the race
Of mankind in one root, and earth with hell
To mingle and involve. Milton.

The best of us appear contented with a mingled, imperfect virtue. Rogers' Sermons.

3. To confuse.

There mingled broils. Milton.

TO MINGLE. v. n. To be mixed; to be united with.

Onriffs will minge with society,
And play the humble host. Shakespeare.

of their mingling with the Gentiles. 2 Maccabees.

Nor priests, nor statesmen,
Could have completed such an ill as that,
It women had not mingled in the mischief. Rowe.

MIN

She, when the few her sister nymphs, approach'd
Her rising fears, and mingled with the rest. Addis.
MIN'GLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Mixture;
medley; confused mals.

Tranapeters.
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shaksp.
Neither can I defend my Spanish Fryar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural mingle. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

MIN'GLER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who mingles.

MIN'IATURE. n. f. [miniature, Fr. from minimum, Lat.]

1. Painting by powders mixed with gum and water. A mode of painting almost appropriated to small figures.

2. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.

The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth the miniature of them. Sidney.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison's Guardian.

The hidden ways
Of nature would'st thou know? how fift the frames
All things in miniature thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels: lo! I Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
I unfold its boughs: observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow seeds describ'd. Philips.

4. Gay has improperly made it an adjective.

Here shall the pencil bid its colours flow,
And make a miniature creation grow.

MIN'IKIN. adj. Small; diminutive. Used in slight contempt.

Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd,
Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm. Shaksp.

MIN'IKIN. n. f. A small sort of pins.

MIN'IM. n. f. [from minus, Latin.]

1. A small being; a dwarf.

Not all
Minims of nature; some of serpent-kind,
Wondrous in length, and corpulence, involv'd
Their slinky folds, and added wings. Milton.

2. This word is applied, in the northern counties, to a small sort of fish, which they pronounce mennim. See MIXNOW.

MIN'IMES. n. f. [Latin.] A being of the least size.

Get you gone, you dwarf,
You minimus of hind'ring knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn. Shaksp.

MIN'ION. n. f. [mignon, Fr.] A favourite;
a darling; a low dependant; one who pleases rather than benefits. A word of contempt; or of slight and familiar kindness.

Mignon, said she; indeed I was a pretty one in those days; I see a number of lads that love you. Sid.
They were made great courtiers, and in the way of minions, when advancement, the most mortal offence to envy, fluried up their former friend to overthrow them. Sidney.

One, who had been a special minion of Andromarus, hated us for having dispossessed him of her heart. Sidney.

Go rate thy minions;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign? Shaksp.

His company must do his minions grace,
Whilst I at home thrive for a merry look. Shaksp.

Edward sent one army into Ireland; not for conquest, but to guard the persons of his minion Piers Gaveston. Darics.

If a man should launch into the history of human nature, we should find the very minions of princes linked in conspiracies against their master. L'Estr.

The drowsy tyrant by his minions led,
To regal rage devotes some patriot's head. Swift.

MIN'IONS. adj. [from minium, Lat.] Of the colour of red lead or vermillion.

Some conceive, that the Red Sea receiveth a red and minious tincture from springs that fall into it.
Brown.

To MIN'ISH. v. a. [from diminish; minus,
Lat.] To lessen; to lop; to impair.

Ye shall not minish ought from your books of your daily task. Exodus.

They are minished and brought low through oppression. Psalms.

Another law was to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipt, minished, or impaired coins of silver, not to be current in payments. Bacon's Henry VII.

MIN'ISTER. n. f. [minister, Lat. ministrare,
French.]

1. An agent; one who is employed to any end; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.

You, whom virtue hath made the princeps of felicity, be not the minister of ruin. Sidney.

Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters;

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness:
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shaksp.

Th' infernal minister advanced,
Sciz'd the due victim. Dryden.

Other spirits govern'd by the will,
Shoot through their tracks, and distant muscles fill;
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Retrains or funds his ministers abroad. Blackmore.

2. One who is employed in the administration of government.

Kings must be answerable to God, but the ministers to kings, whose eyes, ears, and hands they are,
must be answerable to God and man. Bacon.

3. One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal functions.

Epaphras, a faithful minister of Christ. 1 Col.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting forth edicts against dancing and gaming. Addison.

The ministers of the gospel are especially required to shine as lights in the world, because the distinction of their station renders their conduct more ob-servable; and the presumption of their knowledge, and the dignity of their office, gives a peculiar force and authority to their example. Rogers.

Caldus contents himself with thinking, that he never was a friend to heretics and infidels; that he has always been civil to the minister of his parish, and very often given some thing to the charity-schools. Law.

4. A delegate; an official.

If wrongfully
I let God revenge: for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister. Shaksp.

5. An agent from a foreign power without the dignity of an ambassador.

To MIN'ISTER. v. a. [minister, Lat.] To give; to supply; to afford.

All the customs of the Irish would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original and antiquity of that people. Spencer on Ireland.

Now he that ministereth feed to the fower, both minister bread for your food and multiply your seed sown. 2 Corinthians.

The wounded patient bears
The artist's hand that ministers the cure. Otway.

To MIN'ISTER. v. n.

1. To attend; to serve in any office.

At table Eve
Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups
With pleasant liquors crown'd. Milton.

2. To give medicines.

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain? Shaksp.

MIN

3. To give supplies of what is needed; to give assistance; to contribute; to afford.
Others ministered unto him of their substance. Luke.

He who has a soul wholly void of gratitude, should set his soul to learn of his body; for all the parts of that minister to one another. South.

There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out than the existence of a God; yet he that shall content himself with things as they minister to our pleasures and passions, and not make enquiry a little further into their causes and ends, may live long without any notion of such a being. Locke.

Those good men, who take such pleasure in relieving the miserable for Christ's sake, would not have been less forward to minister unto Christ himself. Atterbury.

Fasting is not absolutely good, but relatively, and as it ministers to other virtues. Smalridge.

4. To attend on the service of God.

Whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering. Romans.

MINISTERIAL. adj. [from minister.]

1. Attendant; acting at command.

Understanding is in a man; courage and vivacity in the lion; service, and ministerial officiousness, in the ox. Brown.

From offences unseen, celestial names,
Enlight'ning spirits, and ministerial flames,
Lift we our reason to that sovereign Cause,
Who blest'd the whole with life. Prior.

2. Acting under superior authority.

For the ministerial offices in court there must be an eye unto them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects, as it recalls us from the world, and gives a serious turn to our thoughts. Hogers.

3. Sacerdotal; belonging to the ecclesiastical ticks or their office.

These speeches of Jerom and Chryostom plainly allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker.

4. Pertaining to ministers of state, or persons in subordinate authority.

MINISTERIALLY. adv. In a ministerial manner.

Supremacy of office, by mutual agreement and voluntary economy, belongs to the father; while the son, out of voluntary condescension, submits to act ministerially, or in capacity of mediator. Waterland.

MIN'ISTERY. n. f. [ministerium, Lat.] Office; service. This word is now contracted to ministry, but used by Milton as four syllables.

They that will have their chamber filled with a good scent, make some odoriferous water be blown about it by their servants' mouths that are dexterous in that ministry. Digby.

This temple to frequent
With ministreries due, and solemn rites. Milton.

MIN'ISTRIAL. adj. [from ministry.] Pertaining to a minister.

MIN'ISTRANT. adj. [from minister.] Attendant; acting at command. Pope accents it, not according to analogy, on the second syllable.

His thrones, and pow'rs,
Princedom, and dominations ministrant,
Accompany'd to heav'n's gate. Milton.

Ministrant to their queen with busy care,
Four faithful handmaids the soft rites prepare. Pope.

MINISTRATION. n. f. [from ministro,
Latin.]

1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or commissioned by another.

God made him the instrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own hand to him, with this difference, that God, by his ministration to me, intends to do him a favour. Traylor.

Though sometimes affected by the immediate list of the divine will, yet I think they are most ordinarily done by the ministration of angels. Hale.

2. Service; office; ecclesiastical function. The profession of a clergyman is an holy profession, because it is a ministration in holy things, an attendance at the altar. Low.

If the present ministration be more glorious than the former, the minister is more holy. Atterburn.
MINISTRY. n. f. [contracted from ministry; ministerium, Lat.]

1. Office; service.

So far is an indistinction of all persons, and, by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any true, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more honored than others. Spratt's Sermons.

2. Office of one set apart to preach; ecclesiastical function.

Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.

3. Agency; interposition.

The natural world, he made after a miraculous manner; but directs the affairs of it ever since by standing rules, and the ordinary ministry of a second cause. Atterbury.

To all but thee in fits he seem'd to go,
And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow. Parnell.

The poets introduced the ministry of the gods, and taught the separate existence of human souls. Bentley.

4. Business.

He safe from loud alarms,
Abhor'd the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden.

5. Persons employed in the publick affairs of a state.

I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and it not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Suiff.

MINIUM. n. f. [Lat.] Red lead.

Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcinated into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called minium or mastic; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for emerald; the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill's Mat. Med.

MINNOCK. n. f. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the same word.

An old's note I fixed on his head;
Amidst his Thube must be answered,
And forth my minnock comes. Shakespeare.

MINNOW. n. f. [minne, Fr.] A very small fish; a pink: a corruption of minim, which see.

Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shakspeare.
The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky-colour; his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the spring they make excellent minnow taudies; for being washed well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primrose, and tansy. Walton's Angler.

The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of minnow fishing. Walton's Angler.

MINOR. adj. [Latin.]

1. Petty; inconsiderable.

If there are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to condemn inferior fallacies. Brown.

2. Less; smaller.

They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest. Clarendon.

The difference of a third part in so large and collative an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set in minor and less misdeeds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MINOR. n. f.

1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign, was a minor. Davies on Ireland.
He and his muse might be minors, but the liberties are full grown. Collier.

Long as the year's dull circle seems to run,
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.
The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Suiff.

A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumacious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Ayliff's Parergon.

2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.

The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.

He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest, where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbuthnot.

To MINORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.]

To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.

This doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minimates the object. Glanville.

MINORATION. n. f. [from minorate.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease.

A word not admitted.

Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone, whose effluences are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We hope the mercies of God will confer our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.

MINORITY. n. f. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Lat.]

1. The state of being under age.

I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakspeare.

He is young, and his minority

Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakspeare.
These changes in religion should be said, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or no.

Hayward's Edward vi.
Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon.

If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet.

Their councils are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.

2. The state of being less.

From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or finality in the conclusion. Brown.

3. The smaller number; as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.

MINOTAUR. n. f. [minotaure, Fr. minos and taurus, Lat.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus' labyrinth.

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth,
There minotaurs, and ugly traifons lurk. Shakspeare.

MINSTER. n. f. [minstere, Sax.] 'A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.

MINSTREL. n. f. [menestrel, Spanish; menestrallus, low Lat.] A musician; one who plays upon instruments.

Hark how the minstrel's gin to thrill aloud
Their merry music that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabour, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.

I will give you the minstrel.

—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shakspeare.

I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sundys.

Their fellows

Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each pultry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known. Dryden.

Often our fiers and poets have confest'd,
That music's force can tame the ferious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.

MINSTRELSEY. n. f. [from minstrel.]

1. Music; instrumental harmony.

Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the word applaud his minstrelse. Davies.

That loving wretch that sweats,
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelse, the spheres. Donne.

I began,
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelse,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton.

2. A number of musicians.

Ministring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hast thou arm'd the minstrelse of heaven. Milton.

MINT. n. f. [minthe, Sax. menthe, Fr. mentha, Lat.] A plant.

Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint.
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.

MINT. n. f. [munte, Dutch; mýnetzian, to coin, Saxon.]

1. The place where money is coined.

What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals. Addison.

2. Any place of invention.

A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shakspeare.

As the mint of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party. Addison.

To MINT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To coin; to stamp money.

Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to set the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted. Bacon's Henry vii.

2. To invent; to forge.

Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted. Bacon.

MINTAGE. n. f. [from mint.]

1. That which is coined or stamped.

His pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmelting restour's mintage Character'd in the face. Milton.

2. The duty paid for coining. Ainsworth.
M'NTER. n. f. [from mint.] Coiner.

Sterling ought to be of pure silver called leaf silver, the mint must add other weight, if the silver be not pure. Caenden.

M'NTMAN. n. f. [mint and man.] One skilled in coinage.

He that thinketh Spain to be some great overmatch for this state, is no good mintman; but takes greatness of kingdom according to their bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon.

M'NTMASTER. n. f. [mint and master.]

1. One who presides in coinage.
That which is coined, as mintmastery confided, is alloyed with about a twelfth part of copper. Boyle.

2. One who invents.

The great mintmasters of these terms, the school-men and metaphysicians, have wherewithal to content him. Locke.

M'NUET. n. f. [menue, Fr.] A stately regular dance.

The tender creature could not see his fate,
With whom the dance'd a minuet of late. Stemey
John has assurance to set up for a minuet dancer. Spectator.

M'NUM. n. f.

1. [With printers.] A small sort of printing letter.

2. [With musicians.] A note of slow time, two of which make a semibreve, as two crotchets make a minim; two quavers a crotchet, and two semiquavers a quaver.
Bailey.

He's the courageous captain of compliments; he lights as you ring packings, keeps time, distance, and proportion; tells his minim, one, two, and the third in your bottom. Shakespeare.

M'NU'LE. adj. [minutus, Lat.] Small; little; slender; small in bulk; small in consequence.

Some minut philosophers pretend,
That with our days our pains and pleasures end. Denham.

Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of Providence over all, even the most minut and inconsiderable things. South.

Into small parts the wondrous stone divide,
Ten thousand of minut size exerts
The same propension which the huge possels. Blackmore.

The serum is attenuated by circulation, so as to pass into the minut channels, and become fit nutriment for the body. Arbuthnot.

In all divisions we should consider the larger and more immediate parts of the subject, and not divide it at once into the more minut and remote parts. Watts' Logic.

M'NUTE. n. f. [minutum, Latin.]

1. The sixtieth part of an hour.

This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd among wonders, and when we,
Almost with lifting ravish'd, could not find
His hour of speech a minute. Shakespeare.

2. Any small space of time.

They walk'd about me ev'ry minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart. Shakespeare.
The speed of gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes
wing'd. Milton.

Gods! that the world should turn
On minutes and on moments. Denham's Sophy.

Experience does every minute prove the sad truth of this assertion. South's Sermons.

Tell her, that I some certainty may bring;
I go this minute to attend the king. Dryden.

3. The first draught of any agreement in writing. This is common in the Scottish law: as, have you made a minute of that contract?

To M'NUTE. v. a. [minuter, Fr.] To set down in short hints.

I no sooner heard this critical talk of my works, but I minuted what he had said, and resolv'd to enlarge the plan of my speculations. Spectator.

M'NUTE-BOOK. n. f. [minute and book.]

Book of short hints.

M'NUTE-GLASS. n. f. [minute and glass.]

Glass of which the sand measures a minute.

M'NUTELY. adv. [from minute.] To a small point; exactly; to the least part;
nicely.

In this posture of mind it was impossible for him to keep that slow pace, and observe minutely that order of ranging all he said, from which results an obvious periphrasis. Locke.

Change of night and day.

And of the seasons ever minutely round.
Minutely faithful. Thomson's Summer.

M'NUTELY. adv. [from minute, the substantive.]

1. Every minute; with very little time intervening.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? As if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity till they arise from the mortiferous a state. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. [In the following passage it seems rather to be an adjective, as hourly is both the adverb and adjective.] Happening every minute.

Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach,
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

M'NU'TENESS. n. f. [from minute.] Smallness; exility; inconsiderableness.

The animal spirit and insensible particles never fall under our senses by reason of their minuteness. Bentley.

M'NUTE-WATCH. n. f. [minute and watch.] A watch in which minutes are more distinctly marked than in common watches which reckon by the hour.

Casting our eyes upon a minute-watch, we found that from the beginning of the pumping, about two minutes after the coals had been put in glowing, to the total disappearing of the fire, there had passed but three minutes. Boyle.

M'NIX. n. f. [contracted, I suppose, from minnock.] A young, pert, wanton girl.

Lewd min!

Come, go with me apart. Shakespeare.

Some torches bore, some links,
Before the proud virgin minx. Hudibras.

She, when but yet a tender minx, began
To hold the door, but now sets up for man. Dryden.

M'IRACLE. n. f. [miracle, Fr. miraculum,
Latin.]

1. A wonder; something above human power.

Nothing almost sees miracles
But misery. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Virtuous and holy, chosen from above,
To work exceeding miracles on earth. Shakespeare.

Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be taken by me. Shakespeare.

2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in attes-tation of some truth.

The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain ostentation of power, and to raise unprofitable amazement; but for the real benefit and advantage of men, by feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead. Bentley.

M'IRACULOUS. adj. [miraculosus, Fr. from miracle.] Done by miracle; produced by miracle; effected by power more than natural.

Antiquated progression might easily demonstrate how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy unto six hundred thousand able men. Halegh's Egypt.

Before this day, for thy great name.

Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.

Why this strength

Miraculous yet remaining in that lock?

His might continues in these uncorrupted bones. Milton.

At the first planting of the christian religion,
God was pleased to accompany it with a miraculous power. Tillotson.

M'IRACULOUSLY. adv. [from miraculous.]

By miracle; by power above that of nature.

It was a singular providence of God, to draw those northern heathen nations down into those christian parts, where they might receive christianity, and to mingle nations so remote miraculously, to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenser on Ireland.

Turnus was to be slain that very day, and Æneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in single combat, unless his hurt had been miraculously healed. Dryden.

M'IRACULOUSNESS. n. f. [from miraculous.] The state of being effected by miracle; superiority to natural power.

M'IRADOR. n. f. [Spanish, from mirar, to look.] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies see shows.

Mean time your valiant son, who had before
Grin'd twice, rode round, to ev'ry mirador;
Beneath each lady's stand a shop he made,
And bowing, took th' applauses which they paid. Dryden.

M'IRZ. n. f. [moer, Dut.] Mud; dirt at the bottom of water.

He his rider from her lofty steed
Would have cast down, and trod in dirty mirz. Spenser.

Here's that, which is too weak to be a finer, honest water, which ne'er left man's th' mirz. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

I'm Ralph himself, your truly figure,
Wh' has dragg'd your doubtful out o' th' mire. Hudibras.

I appeal to any man's reason, whether it be not better that there should be a distinction of land and sea, than that all should be mire and water. Moor.

Now plough'd in mire, now by sharp branches torn. Beaumont.

To M'IRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To whelm in the mud; to soil with mud.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's filth at my gates?

Who feared thus, and mir'd with mire,
I might have said to part of it is mire. Shakespeare.

M'IRZ. n. f. [myr, Welsh; mýra, Saxon;
mirz, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.

M'IRZESS. n. f. [from miry.] Dirtiness;
fulness of mire.

M'IRKSOME. adj. [morck, dark, Danish.]

In the derivatives of this set no regular orthography is observed: it is common to write murky, to which the rest ought to conform.] Dark; obscure.

Through mirksome air her ready way she makes,
Fanny Queen.

M'IRROIR. n. f. [miroir, French; mirar, Spanish, to look.]

1. A looking-glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection.

And in his waters which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the crystal bright. Spenser.

That pow'r which gave me eyes the world to view,
To view myself infus'd an inward light.

Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect light. Davies.

Let's bright the moon,
But opposite in Jewell'd west was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults, endures
A remedy like those whom music cures. Waller.
By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wondering, he saw his features and his hue
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew. Dryden.

Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of nire,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread event depend. Pope.

2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; as, men look in a glass to adjust their mien or dress;
an exemplar; an archetype.

The works of nature are no less exact, than if the did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Locke.

O goddess, heavenly bright,
Mirror of grace and majesty divine. Fairy Q.
How far it thou, mirror of all martial men? Shakespeare.

Mirror of ancient faith in early youth. Dryden.
MIRROR-STONE. n. f. [silicite, Lat.] A kind of transparent stone. Ainsworth.

MIRTH. n. f. [mýrthos, Saxon.] Merriment; jollity; gaiety; laughter.

To give a kingdom for a mirth, to sit,
And keep the turn of tripping with a slave. Shaksp.
His eye begets occasion for his wit;

For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest. Shakespeare.
Most of the appearing mirth in the world is not mirth but art: the wounded spirit is not seen, but walks under a disguise. South.

With genial joy to warm the soul,
Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl. Pope.

MIRTHFUL. adj. [mirth and full.]
Merry; gay; cheerful.

No simple word,
That shall be utter'd at our mirthful board,
Shall make us sad next mornning. Ben Jonson.

The feast was ferv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.

MIRTHLESS. adj. [from mirth.] Joyless;
cheerless.

MIRY. adj. [from mire.]

1. Deep in mud; muddy.

Thou should'st have heard how her horse fell,
and the under her horse: thou should'st have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled. Shaksp.

All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures, and there grovelled in endless stench and misery. Temple.

Deep, through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
Above her uncle rose the chalky clay. Gay.

So have I seen ill-coupled hounds Drag cliff rent ways in miry grounds. Swift.

2. Consisting of mire.

Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain
Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,
How they are flun'd like meadows, yet not dry,
With miry slime left on them by a flood? Shaksp.

MIS, an inseparable particle used in con-position to mark an ill sense, or deprava-tion of the meaning: as, chance, luck;
mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miscomputation, false reckoning; to like, to be pleased; to dislike, to be offended; from mis in Teutonic and French, used in the same sense. Of this it is difficult to give all the examples;
but those that follow will sufficiently explain it.

MISACCEPTATION. n. f. [mis and accep- tation.] The act of taking in a wrong sense.

MISADVENTURE. n. f. [mifadventure, Fr.
mis and adventure.] Mischance; misfortune; ill luck; bad fortune.

Your looks are pale and wild, and do import Some misadventure. Shakespeare.

When a commander, either upon necessity or mifadventure, falleth into danger, it much ad-vanceth both his reputation and enterprise, if bravely he behaveth himself. Hayward.

The body consisted, after all the losses and mif- adventures, of no less than six thousand foot.

Distinguish betwixt mifadventure and deligh.
L'Estrange.

The trouble of a mifadventure now and then,
that reaches not his innocence or reputation, may not be an ill way to teach him more caution. Locke.

MISADVENTURED. adj. [from mifadventure.] Unfortunate.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes,
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose mifadventure'd piteous overthrows
Do with their death bury their parents' strife. Shak.

MISADVISED. adj. [mis and advised.] Ill directed.

MISAIMED. adj. [mis and aim.] Not aimed rightly.

The idle stroke enforcing furious ways,
Missing the mark of his misaimed flight,
Did fall to ground. Fairy Queen.

MISANTHROPE. } n. f. [mifanthrope, Fr. misanthropos.] A hater of mankind.

I am misanthropos, and hate mankind. Shaksp.
Alas, poor dean! his only scope
Was to be held a misanthropos;
This into gen'ral odium drew him. Swift.

MISANTHROPY. n. f. [misanthropic, Fr.
from misanthrope.] Hatred of mankind.

MISAPPLICATION. n. f. [mis and applica- tion.] Application to a wrong purpose.

The indistinctness of many in the community of name, or the mifapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt thereof. Brown.

The vigilance of those who preside over these charities is so exemplary, that persons disposed to do good can entertain no suspicions of the mifap- plication of their bounty. Atterbury.

It is our duty to be provident for the future, and to guard against whatever may lead us into mifap- plications of it. Rogers.

TO MISAPPLY. v. a. [mis and apply.] To apply to wrong purposes.

Virtue itself turns vice, being mifapplied,
And vice sometimes by actions dignified. Shaksp.
The holy treasure was to be reserved, and illused for holy uses, and not mifapplied to any other ends.

He that knows that whiteness is the name of that colour he has observed in snow, will not mifapply that word as long as he retains that idea. Locke.

TO MISAPPREHEND. v. a. [mis and ap- prehend.] Not to understand rightly.

That your reasonings may lose none of their force by my mifapprehending or misrepresenting them, I shall give the reader your arguments. Locke.

MISAPPREHENSION. n. f. [mis and appre- hension.] Mistake; not right apprehension.

It is a degree of knowledge to be acquainted with the causes of our ignorance: what we have to say under this head, will equally concern our mifapprehensions and errors. Glennville.

TO MISASCRIBE. v. a. [mis and ascribe.]
To ascribe falsely.

That may be mifascribed to art which is the bare production of nature. Boyle.

TO MISASSIGN. v. a. [mis and assign.] To assign erroneously.

We have not mifassigned the cause of this phenomenon. Boyle.
TO MISBECOME. v. a. [mis and become.]

Not to become; to be unseemly; not to suit.

Either she has a possibility in that which I think impossible, or else impossible loves need not mifbe- come me. Sidney.

What to the dauphin from England?
—Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not mifbecome
The mighty tender. Shakespeare.

That boldness which lads get amongst play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and ill-turned confidence, that those mifbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.

Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct;
Thy father will not act what mifbecomes him. Addison.

MISBEGET. } adj. [begot or begotten MISBEGETTING.] with mis.] Unlawfully or irregularly begotten.

Contaminated, base.
And mifbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shakespeare.
Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour mifbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were but newly born. Shakespeare.

The mifbegotten infant grows,
And, ripe for birth, disends with deadly throes
The swelling rind, with unavailing strife,
To leave the wooden womb, and pulses into life. Dryden.

TO MISBEHAVE. v. n. [mis and behave.]
To act ill or improperly.

MISBEHAVED. adj. [mis and behaved.]
Untaught; ill-bred; uncivil.

Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a mifbehave'd and sullen wench,
Thou pou'st it upon thy fortune and thy love. Shaksp.

MISBEHAVIOUR. n. f. [mis and behaviour.]
Ill conduct; bad practice.

The mifbehaviour of particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laud-ably in some respects, who does not so in others.

ADDISON'S FREEHOLDER.
MISBELIEF. n. f. [mis and belief.] False religion; a wrong belief.

MISBELIEVER. n. f. [mis and believer.]
One that holds a false religion, or believes wrongly.

Yes, if I drew it with a curs'd intent
To take a mifbeliever to my bed,
It must be so. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

TO MISCALL. v. a. [mis and call.] To name improperly.

My heart will sigh when I miscal it so. Shaksp.
The third act, which connects propositions and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscal it if we name it reason. Glennville's Scepis.

What you miscal their folly is their care. Dryd.
TO MISCALCULATE. v. a. [mis and cal- culate.] To reckon wrong.

After all the care I have taken, there may be,
in such a multitude of passages, several miscalculated, misinterpreted, and miscalculated. Arbutnot.

MISCARriage. n. f. [mis and carriage.]
1. Unhappy event of an undertaking; failure; ill conduct.

Resolutions of reforming do not always satisfy justice, nor prevent vengeance for former mifcar- riages. King Charles.

When a counsellor, to save himself,
Would lay mifcarriages upon his prince,
Exposing him to publick rage and hate,
O, 'tis an act as infamous as base,
As should a common soldier seek behind,
And thrust his general in the front of war. Dryden.

If the neglect or abuse of the liberty he had, to examine what would really make for his happiness, misleads him, the mifcarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and when they made to ill use, was now employed in digging and plowing; and the exult of fertility which contributed to much to their misfarriges, was retracted and cut off.

Your cures aloud you tell,
But wisely your misfarriges conceal. Garth.

How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the failings and misfarriges of the righteous shall not be concealed, though the mercy of God be magnified in their pardon. Rogers.

2. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.

There must be misfarriges and abortions; for there died many women with child. Graunt.

To MISFARRY. v. n. [mis and carry.]

1. To fail; not to have the intended event; not to succeed; to be lost in an enterprise; not to reach the point intended.

Have you not heard of Frederick, the great soldier, who misfarried at sea? Shakespeare.

Our sister's man is certainly misfarried. Shakespeare.

Is it concluded he shall be protector?
—It is determin'd, not concluded yet:

But so it must be if the king misfarry. Shakespeare.

If you misfarry,
Your business of the world hath to an end,
And machination ceases. Shakespeare.

Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all misfarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low. Shakespeare.

I could mention some projects which I have brought to maturity, and others which have misfarried.

No wonder that this expedient should so often misfarry, which requires so much art and genius to arrive at any perfection in it. Swift.

2. To have an abortion.

Give them a misfarrying womb and dry breasts.

So many politick conceptions to elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for a delivery, do yet, in the issue, misfarry and prove abortive. South.

His wife misfarried; but the abortion proved a female fetus. Pope and Arbuthnot.

You have proved yourself more tender of another's embryos, than the fondest mothers are of their own; for you have preserved every thing that I misfarried of. Pope.

To MISFART. v. a. [mis and cart.] To take a wrong account of.

Men misfart their days; for in their age they deduce the account not from the day of their birth, but the year of our Lord wherein they were born.

Brown.

MISCELLANEOUS. n. f. [miscellaneous, Lat.]

This is corrupted into maslin or meslin.

Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

It is thought to be of use to make some miscellaneous
in corn; as if you sow a few beans with wheat, your wheat will be the better. Bacon.

MISCELLANEOUS. adj. [miscellaneous, Lat.]

Mingled; composed of various kinds.

Being miscellaneous in many things, he is to be received with suspicion; for such as amass all relations must err in some, and without offence be unbelieved in many. Brown.

And what the people but a herd confus'd,
A miscellaneous rabble, who extol Things vulgar, and well weigh'd scarce worth the praise. Milton.

MISCELLANEOUSNESS. n. f. [from miscellaneous.]

Composition of various kinds.

MISCELLANY. adj. [miscellaneous, Lat.]

Mixed of various kinds.

The power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations.

Bacon.

MISCELLANY. n. f. A mass formed out of various kinds.

I acquit myself of the presumption of having lent my name to recommend miscellanies or works of other men. Pope.

When they have joined their pericranies,
Out slips a book of miscellanies. Swift.

VOL. II.

MISCHANCE. n. f. [mis and chance.] Ill luck; ill fortune; misfortune; mishap.

The lady Capotopia sent him to excuse the mis-chances of her bonds in that dangerous fort.

Extreme dealing had driven her to put herself with a great lady, by which occasion she had flumbled upon such mischances as were little for the honour of her family. Sidney.

View these letters full of bad mischance,
France is revolted. Shakespeare.

Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain. Shakespeare.

Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man but some fault chargeable upon him; and nothing can be a fault mischance not naturally in a man's power to prevent; otherwise it is a man's unhappiness, his mischance or calamity, but not his fault. South.

MISCHIEF. n. f. [meschaf, old Fr.]

1. Harm; hurt; whatever is ill and inju-riously done.

The law is that case punisheth the thought; for better is a mischiefe than an inconvenience. Spenser.

Come you worth'ring ministers!
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischiefe. Shakespeare.

Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs. Shakespeare.

Was I the cause of mischiefe, or the man, Whose lawless left the fatal war began? Dryden.

2. Ill consequence; vexatious affair.

States call in foreigners to fight them against a common enemy; but the mischiefe was, these allies would never allow that the common enemy was subdued. Swift.

To MISCHIEF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hurt; to harm; to injure.

If the greatest inward heat be not sweetened by meekness, or not governed by prudence, can it bring to our souls any benefit? rather it mischiefs them. Spratt.

MISCHIEFMAKER. n. f. [from mischiefe
and make.] One who causes mischief.

MISCHIEF-MAKING. adj. Causing harm.

Come not thou with mischiefe-making beauty,
To interpose between us, look not on him. Rowe.

MISCHIEVOUS. adj. [from mischiefe.]

1. Harmful; hurtful; destructive; noxious; pernicious; injurious; wicked: used both of persons and things.

This false, wily, doubling disposition is intolerably mischievous to society. South.

I'm but a half-straw'd villain yet;
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden.

He had corrupted or deluded most of his servants, telling them that their master was run mad; that he had disinherited his heir, and was going to settle his estate upon a parish-boy; that if he did not look after their master he would do some very mischievous thing. Arbuthnot.

2. Spiteful; malicious. Ainsworth.

MISCHIEVOUSLY. adv. [from mischiefe.]

Noxiously; hurtfully; wickedly.

Nor was the cruel destiny content
To sweep at once her life and beauty too;
But like a harden'd felon took a pride
To work more mischievously slow,
And plundered first, and then destroy'd. Dryden.

MISCHIEVOUSNESS. n. f. [from mischievous.] Hurtfulness; perniciousness; wickedness.

Compare the harmlessness, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenious pliancy, which is in youth, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the constant obliquity found in an aged, long-practised sinner. South.

MISCHIE. adj. [from misceo, Lat.] Possible to be mingled.

* Acid spirits are subtle liquors which come over in distillations, not inflammable, mischie with water. Arbuthnot.

MISCIATION. n. f. [mis and citation.]

Unfair or false quotation.

Being charged with misce in unfair dealing.

it was requisite to say something; honesty is a tender point. Collier.

To MISCIATE. v. a. [mis and cite.] To quote wrong.

MISCLAIM. n. f. [mis and claim.] Mistaken claim.

Errors, misclaim and forgetfulness, become faults for some remission of extreme rigour. Bacon.

MISCOMPUTATION. n. f. [mis and computation.] False reckoning.

It was a general misfortune and miscomputation of that time, that the party had so good an opinion of their own reputation and interest. Clarendon.

MISCONCEIT. n. f. [mis and conceit.]

MISCONCEPTION. n. f. [mis and conception.] False opinion; wrong notion.

The other which instead of it we are required to accept is only by error and misconceit named the ordinance of Jesus Christ; no one proof being as yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in every deed. Hosker.

It cannot be that our knowledge should be other than an heap of misconception and error. Gannille.

Great errors and dangers result out of a misconception of the nature of things. Huvel.

It will be a great satisfaction to see those pieces of most ancient history, which have been chiefly preserved in Scripture, confirmed anew, and freed from those misconceptions or misrepresentations which made them sit uneasily upon the spirits even of the best men. Burnet.

To MISCONCEIVE. v. a. [mis and conceive.]

To misjudge; to have a false notion of.

Ne let false whispers, breeding hidden fears,
Break gentle sleep with misconceived doubt. Spenser.

Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes of those things, which, for want of due consideration heretofore, they misconceived.

Hosker.

Misconceived John of Arc hath been

A virgin from her tender infancy. Shakespeare.

MISCONDUCT. n. f. [mis and conduct.] Ill behaviour; ill management.

They are industriously proclaimed and *misconduct*ed by such as are guilty or innocent of the same slips of misconduct in their own behaviour. Addison.

It highly concerned them to reflect, how great obligation both the memory of their past misconduct, and their present advantages, laid on them, to walk with care and circumspection. Rogers.

To MISCONDUCT. v. a. [mis and conduct.]

To manage amiss; to carry on wrong.

MISCONJECTURE. n. f. [mis and conjecture.]

A wrong guess.

I hope they will plausibly receive our attempts, or candidly correct our misconjectures. Brown.

To MISCONJECTURE. v. a. [mis and conjecture.] To guess wrong.

MISCONSTRUCTION. n. f. [mis and construction.] Wrong interpretation of words or things.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately
To strike at me upon his misconstruction,
When he conjunct, and flatter'd his displeasure.
Tript me behind. Shakespeare.

Others conceive the literal acceptation to be a misconstruction of the symbolical expression. Brown.

Those words were very weakly inserted where they are so liable to misconstruction. Stillingfleet.

To MISCONSTRUCT. v. a. [mis and construe.]

To interpret wrong.

That which by right exposition buildeth up Christian faith, being misconstructed breedeth error; between true and false construction the difference reason must shew. Hosker.

We would have had you heard
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same Unto the citizens, who, haply, may Misconstrue us in him. Shakespeare.

Many of the unbelieving Israelites would have misconstructed this story of mankind. Raleigh.

Do not, great Sir, misconstrue his intent,

Mortal rebellion what was prudent care,
To guard himself by necessary war. Dryden
A virtuous emperor was much afflicted to find his sons misconduct and to stand by a party. Add.

MISCREANCE, n. f. [mis and creance or miscreancy.] miscreancy, Fr.] Unbelief; false faith; adherence to a false religion.

If thou wilt renounce thy miscreancy,
And my true religion yield thee full for ay,
Lest will I grant thee for thy miscreancy. Sp.
The more usual cause of deprivation are murder, manslaughter, heresy, miscreancy, atheism, simony. Atty.

MISCREANT, n. f. [miscreant, Fr.]

1. One that holds a false faith; one who believes in false gods.

Their prophet, duly condemned them as an adulterous seed, and a wicked generation of miscreants, which had forsaken the living God. Hooker.

2. A vile wretch.
Now by Apollo, King,
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain,
—O villain! miscreant! Sh.

It extraordinary lewdy proves ineffectual, those miscreants ought to be made sensible that our conscience is armed with force. Add.

MISCREATE, v. a. [mis and create.] Miscreate, Fr.] Formed unaturally or illegitimately; made as by a blunder of nature.

Then made he head against his enemies,
And miscreant flew or miscreant Fairy Queen.
Effusions he took that miscreant hit,
And that false other spirit, on whom he spread
A seeming body of the subtle air. Sp.
God forbid, my lord,
That you should fashion, wife, or bow your readings
With opening titles miscreant, whole right Suits not in native colours with the truth. Sh.

MISCREATED, v. a. [mis and create.] Evil action.

O God,
If thou wilt be avenged on my miscreants,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Sh.
Evils, which our own miscreants have wrought. Mil.

Chas'd from a throne, abandon'd and exil'd
For lost miscreants were punishment too mild. Dryd.

To MISDEEM, v. a. [mis and deem.] To judge ill of; to mistake.

All unwearied an enchanter had His sense abus'd, and made him to misdeem
My loyalty, not such as it did seem. Fairy Queen.
Besides, were we unchangeable in will,
And of a wit that nothing could misdeem;
Equal to God, whose wisdom smelt still
And never errs, we might ourselves esteem. Dav.

To MISDEMEAN, v. a. [mis and demean.] To behave ill.

From frailty
And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,
Have misdeem'd yourself. Sh.

MISDEMEANOR, n. f. [mis and demean.] Offence; ill behaviour; something less than an atrocious crime.

The house of commons have only power to censure the members of their own house, in point of election, or misdeemeanors in or towards that house. Bacon.

It is no real disgrace to the church merely to lose her privileges, but to forfeit them by her fault or misdeemeanors. South.

These could never have touched the head, or stopped the source of these unhappy misdeemeanors, for which the punishment was sent. Woodward.

MISDEVOUION, n. f. [mis and devotion.]

Mistaken piety.

A place, where misdevotion frames
A thousand prayers to saints, whose very names
The church knew not, heav'n knows not yet. Don.

Try the wrong foul
Not willfully misdoing, but unaware. Mil.

I have misdone, and I endure the smart,
Lest to acknowledge, but more loth to part. Dryd.

MISDOER, n. f. [mis and do.] An offender; a criminal; a malefactor.

Were they not contained in duty with a fear of law, which inflicteth sharp punishments to misdoers, no man should enjoy any thing. Spenser.

MISDOING, n. f. [mis and do.] Offence; deviation from right.

The worst is, to think ourselves safe so long as we keep our injuries from the knowledge of men, and out of our own view, without any awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our misdoings. L'Estr.

To MISDOUBT, v. a. [mis and doubt.] To suspect of deceit or danger.

If the only misdo me, I were in heaven; for quickly I would bring sufficient assurance. Sh.
I do not misdo my wife, but I would be loth to turn them both together; a man may be too confident. Sh.

The bird that hath been lined in a bush,
With trembling wings *misdo*eth every bush;
And I, the hapless made to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was misdo, was caught, and kill'd. Sh.

If you misdo me that I am not he,
I know not how I shall assure you farther. Sh.

To believe his wiles my truth can move,
Is to misdo my reason for my love. Dryden.

MISDOUBT, n. f. [mis and doubt.] 1. Suspicion of crime or danger.

power by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others. Locke.

That vain and foolish hope, which is misemployed
on temporal objects, produces many sorrows. Add.
They grew dissolute and prophan; and by mis employing the advantages which God had thrown into their lap, provoked him to withdraw them. Atterbury.

MISEMPLYMENT, n. f. [mis and employ.] Improper application.

An improvident expence, and misemployment of their time and faculties. Hale.

MISER, n. f. [mis and er, Lat.]

1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.

Do not disdain to carry with you the worst words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the bare title of the sinner. Sidney.

I wish that it may not prove some ominous fore-token of misfortune to have met with such a miser
as I am. Sidney.

Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great achievements, great yourself to make, Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's sake. Spenser.

2. A wretch; a mean fellow.
Deceit miser! baleful wretch!

I am deceived of a gentler blood. Sh.

3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty. This is the only sense now in use.

Though he be dearer to my soul than rest
To weary pilgrims, or to miser's gold,
Rather than wrong Castulo I'll forget her. Owey.
No silver taunts by dying miser's given;
Here had the rage of ill-requited Heav'n;
But such plain roofs as pity could raise,
Agreeably vocal with the Maker's praise. Pope.

MISERABLE, adj. [miserable, Fr. miser,
Latin.]

1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.

O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?

Most miserable is the desire that's glorious. Sh.
What's more miserable than discontent? Sh.
There will be a future state, and then how miser-

we are capable of, and miser the utmost pain. Tale.

Perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language than to part entirely with those tempers which we learnt in miser. Law.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.

When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our *miser*ies our foes. Sh.

The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strike,
And mourn the *miser*ies of human life. Dryden.

3. [from miser.] Covetousness; avarice.

Not in use. Miser now signifies not an unhappy, but a covetous man; yet miser now signifies not covetousness but unhappiness.

He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck of th' world: he covetous
Than miser itself would give. Sh.

In a fabric of forty thousand pounds charge, I with thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model;

for a little misery may easily breed some difficulty of greater charge.

MISERE'EM. n. f. [mis and esteem.] Disregard; slight.

Take, oh take those lips away, That to sweetly were forsworn; And those eyes, the break of day, Lights that do mislead the morn. Shaksp.

Poor misled men: your states are yet worthy pity. If you would hear, and change your savage minds, Leave to be made. Ben Jonson.

Thrust not servants who misled or misinform you. Bacon.

O thieves night, Why should'st thou but for some felonious end, In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars, That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps With everlasting oil, to give due light To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.

What can they teach and not mislead? Ignorant of themselves, of God much more? Milt.

Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill, And recompense, as friends, the good mislaid; If mercy be a precept of thy will, Return that mercy on thy servant's head. Dryden.

The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mislead us; yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception. Glanville.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mislead us from it. Locke.

'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill Appear in writing or in judging ill; But of the two less dangerous is the offence To tire our patience, then mislead our sense. Pope.

MISLEADER. n. f. [from mislead.] One that leads to ill.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt see as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my wits;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misdoers. Shakf.
They have disordered and abandoned those heretical phantasies that bring our Saviour, whom by their misleaders they have anciently plucked.

good men, fair speakers with smiling countenances.
Ajcham.

TO MISLIVE. v. n. [mis and live.] To live ill.

Should not think God, that gave him that good,
Eke cherish his child in his way the good,
For it he mislive in leudness and lust,
Little boots all the wealth and the trust. Spenser.

TO MISMANAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.]
To manage ill.

The debates of princes councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism. Locke.

MISMANAGEMENT. n. f. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.

It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ. Locke.

The falls of favorites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagement, taxation new,
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true. Pope.

matter frowned. Ajcham.

Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they are young. Ajch.
The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our faculty up. Shakfpeare.

MISORDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.

When news was brought to Richard the Second,
that his uncle, who sought to reform the misorders of his councillors, were persuaded in a wood near unto the court, merrily demanded of one Sir Hugh a Lance, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat disheartened of his wits, what he would advise him to do. He gave forth Sir Hugh, and slay them every mother's son; and when thou hast so done, thou hast killed the faithful friends thou hast in England. Camden.

MISORDERLY. adj. [from misorder.] Irregular; unlawful.

His over-much fearing of you drives him to seek some misorderly shift, to be helped by some other book, or to be prompted by some other scholar. Ajch.

sive misspent. [mis and spend.]

1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.

What a deal of cold business doth a man misspent the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news. Ben Jonson.

Let him now endeavour to redeem what he hath misspent by employing more of that leisure in this duty for the future. Duty of Man.

First guilty conscience does the mirror bring,
Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting;
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long misspent, luxurious life. Dryden.

I this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain,
And think a grave reply misspent and vain. Blackm.

He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has misspent much has still a greater concern. Rogers.

Wise men retrieve as far as they are able, every misspent or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.

2. To waste; with a reciprocal pronoun.
Now let the wretched knave their thirty limbs Differ, for the total moisture due
To apples, berries, &c. misspends itself
In barren trees. Philips.

MISPENDER. n. f. [from misspend.] One who spends ill or prodigally.

I suspect the excellency of those mens parts who are dissolute, and careless mispenders of their time. Norris.

TO MISPLACE. v. a. [mis and place.] To put in a wrong place.

I have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders, before I'll see the crown to toul misplaced. Shakf.
What little arts govern the world! we need not
An armed enemy or corrupted friend,
When served but misplaced, or love mistaken.
Performs the work. Denham.

Is a man betray'd by such agents as he employs?
He misplaced his confidence, took hypocrisy for fidelity, and to relied upon the services of a pack of villains. South.

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity; we,
who could not very forcibly the affect! Atterbury.

TO MISPOINT. v. a. [mis and point.] To confuse sentences by wrong punctuation.

TO MISPRIS. v. a. Sometimes it signifies mistaken, from the French verb mef- prendre; sometimes undervalued or di-dained, from the French verb mepri- ser. Hammer. It is in both senses wholly obsolete.

1. To mistake.
You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood;
I am not guilty of Lylander's blood. Shakfpeare.

2. To fight; to scorn; to despise.
He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether misprised. Shakfpeare.

Pluck indignation on thy head;
By the misprising of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire. Shakfpeare.

MISPRISION. n. f. [from misprise.]
1. Scorn; contempt. Not in use.

Here take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift!
That doth in vile misprison shackle up
My love, and her desert. Shakfpeare.

2. Mistake; misconception. Not in use.
Thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid thy love juice on some true love's sight;
Of thy misprison must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true. Shakfpeare.

We feel such or such a sentiment within us, and herem is no cheat or misprison; it is truly so, and our sense concludes nothing of its rite. Clanville.

3. [In common law.] It signifies neglect, negligence, or oversight. Misprison of treason is the concealment, or not disclosing, of known treason; for the which the offenders are to suffer imprisonment during the king's pleasure, lose their goods and the profits of their lands during their lives. Misprison of felony, is the letting any person, committed for treason or felony, or suspicion of either, to go before he be indicted. Council.

sequence, which is clear. Bramhall against Hobbs.

TO MISRECKON. v. a. [mis and reckon.]
To reckon wrong; to compute wrong.

Whoever finds a mistake in the sum total, must allow himself out, though after repeated trials he may not see in which article he has misreckoned. Swift.

TO MISRELA TE. v. a. [mis and relate.] To relate inaccurately or falsely.

To satisfy me that he misrelated not the experiment, he brought two or three small pipes of glass, which gave me the opportunity of trying it. Boyle.

MISRELATION. n. f. [from misrelate.]
False or inaccurate narrative.

Mine was only to pretend those things in writing, which had been argued between us by word of mouth; a course much to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being less subject to mistakes and misrelations, and wherein paralogisms are more quickly detected. Bramhall.

MIS

To MISREMEMBER. v. a. [mis and remember.] To mistake by trusting to memory. If I much misremember not, I had such a spirit from peas kept long enough to lose their verdure. Boyle.

To MISREPORT. v. a. [mis and report.] To give a false account of; to give an account disadvantageous and false.

His doctrine was misreported, as though he had every where preached this, not only concerning the Gentiles, but also touching the Jews. Hooke.

A man that never yet Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace. Shaksp. The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often taken on the worst side, lies in misreporting upon the various comparisons of these. Locke.

MISREPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] False account; false and malicious representation.

We defend him not, Only desire to know his crime: 'tis possible It may be some mistake or misreport, Some false suggestion, or malicious scandal. Dunk.

As by flattery a man is usually brought to open his bottom to his mortal enemy, so by detractation, and a slanderous misreport of persons, he is often brought to shut the same even to his best and truest friends. South's Sermons.

To MISREPRESENT. v. a. [mis and represent.] To represent not as it is; to falsify to disadvantage: mis often signifies not only error, but malice or mischief.

Two qualities necessary to a reader before his judgment should be allowed, are common honesty and common sense; and that no man could have misrepresented that paragraph, unless he were utterly destitute of one or both. Swift.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs of some facts, and so easy to forget the circumstances of others, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious and inquisitive heads, who proceed altogether upon conjectures. Swift.

MIST. n. f. [myrte, Saxon.]

1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
To us discovers day from far;
His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
Which our dark nation long involv'd. Denham.
And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Rowson.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; to a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, when they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Gray.

But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
And night with sable shades involves his head. Dryden.

A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.

My peoples eyes once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are walk'd into the most desperate actions. King Charles.

Thoughts! which how found they harbour in thy breast.

Adam, misthought of her to thee so dear! Milton.

TO MISTIME. v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.

MISTINESS. n. f. [from misty.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.

The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glasses, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detain or imbibes the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon.

MISTION. n. f. [from mistus, Lat.] The state of being mingled.

In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mytion, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon dissolution. Brown.

Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mistion, produce colour. Boyle.

MISTLETOE. n. f. [myrtelean, Saxon; mistel, Danish, birdlime; and tan, a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a baton, divided into four parts, and beset with earth; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, enclosing a plain heart-shaped seed: this plant is always produced from feed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, but will always grow upon trees, from whence the ancients accounted it a superplant, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without seed. The manner of its propagation is as follows: the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree, for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately furrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of it, strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this viscous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth and trees: whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Miller.

If snow do continue, sheepe hardly that fare
Crave mistle and ivy for them for to spare. Tupper.

A barren and defetted vale, you see it is:
The trees, though summer, yet lorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe. Shaks.

Mistletoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazels, and rarely upon oaks: the mistletoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green winter and summer, and beareth a white glittering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.

All your temples strow
With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe. Gay.

MIS'LINER. adj. [mis and like.] Resembling a mist.

Good Romeo, hide thyself.

A lord will hear you play;
But I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left over-eying of his odd behaviour,
You chaff into some merry passion.

4. Chastity; purity of manners.

Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By these exterior shews? Put he is more,
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakespeare.
Of the general character of women, which is modesty, he has taken a most becoming care; for his amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden.

Talk not to a lady in a way that modesty will not permit her to answer. Clayton.

MODESTY-PIECE, n. f.

A narrow lace which runs along the upper part of the stays before, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Adams.

MODICUM, n. f. [Latin.] Small portion;
pittance.

What modicum of wit he utters: his evasions have cars thus long. Shakespeare.

Though hard their fate,
A cruse of water, and an ear of corn,
Yet still they grudge'd it. Dryden.

MODIFIABLE, adj. [from modify.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.

It appears to be more difficult to conceive a ditinct, visible image in the uniform, invariable ef-face of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either still escapes my comprehension. Locke.

MODIFIABLE, adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.

MODIFICATION, n. f. [modification, Fr.]
The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of external qualities or mode.

The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, the letters of the alphabet, formed by the motions of the mouth. Haller.

The phenomena of colours in reflection and reflected light, are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impressed, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton.

If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cognitive substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Beattie.

TO MODIFY, v. a. [modifier, French.]

1. To change the external qualities or accidents of any thing; to shape.

Yet there is that property in all letters, of apt-ness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the voluble motions of the organs, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.

The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fell upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton.

2. To soften; to moderate.

Of his grace

He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.

TO MODIFY, v. n. To extenuate.

matter, there is hazard on the yielding side. Leitch.

MODILLON, n. f. [Fr. modilolus, Lat.]

Modillions, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the cornithian and composite orders, and serve to support the projection of the hammer or drip: this part must be distinguished from the great model, which is the diameter of the pillar, for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillions, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabric. Harris.

The modillions or dentelli make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spectator.

MODISH, adj. [from mode.] Fashionable;
formed according to the reigning custom,

But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd. Dryden.

Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city; the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more vi-tuous than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Spence.

MODISHLY, adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.

Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs modishly. Locke.

MODISHNESS, n. f. [from modish.] Affectation of the fashion.

TO MODULATE, v. a. [modulator, Lat.] To form found to a certain key, or to certain notes.

The nose, lips, teeth, palate, jaw, tongue, wefan, lungs, muscles of the chest, diaphragm, and muscles of the belly, all serve to make or modulate
the found. Grew's Cynol.

Could any person so modulate her voice as to deceive so many. Broomer.

Felo propagates around
Each charm of modulated found. Anon.

MODULATION, n. f. [from modulate; modulation, French.]

1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.

The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixed; the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been reputed all different kinds. Woodward.

The speech, as it is a sound resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the sight, but as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognition with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the invisible powers and human souls clothed in flesh. Government of the Tongue.

2. Sound modulated; harmony; melody.

Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade,
Their modulations mix, mellifluous. Thomson.

MODULATOR, n. f. [from modulate.] He who forms founds to a certain key; a tuner; that which modulates.

The tongue is the grand instrument of taste, the faithful judge of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, and the necessary servant of mastication. Darwin.

MODULE, n. f. [modulus, Lat.] An empty representation; a model; an external form.

My heart hath one poor sting to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then, all this thou see'st, is but a cloud
And module of confounded royalty. Shakespeare.

MODUS, n. f. [Latin.] Something paid as a compensation for tithes on the supposition of being a moderate equivalent.

One terrible circumstance of this bill, is turning the title of flax and hemp into what the lawyers call a modus, or a certain sum in lieu of a tenth part of the product. Swijt.

MODWALL, n. f. [picus.] A bird. Ainsw.

MOE, adj. [nia, Saxon. See Mo.] More; a greater number.

The chronicles of England mention no moe than only six kings bearing the name of Edward since the conquest, therefore it cannot be there should be more. Hooker.

MOHAIR, n. f. [mohere, moire, French.]
Thread or stuff made of camels or other hair.

She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the figures on an Indian chest,
And when she sees her friend in deep despair,
Observes how much a cheat exceeds mohair. Pope.

MOHOCK, n. f. The name of a cruel nation of America given to ruffians who infected, or rather were imagined to infect, the streets of London.

From milk-top he starts up mohock. Prior.
Who has not troubled at the mohock's name? Cay.

Thou hast fallen upon me with the rage of a mad dog, or a mohock. Dennis.

one pound seven shillings.

MOIETY, n. f. [moitie, Fr. from moien, the middle.] Half; one of two equal parts.

This company being divided into two equal moieties, the one before, the other since the coming of Christ, that part which, since the coming of Christ, partly hath embraced, and partly shall embrace, the christian religion, we term ashy a moie proper name, the church of Christ. Hooker.

The death of Antony
Is not a single doom, in that name lay
A moie of the world. Shakespeare.

Tough'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moie of the principal. Shakespeare.

The militia was divided, a moie of which should be nominated by the king, and the other moie by the parliament. Clarendon.

As this is likely to produce a cessation of arms among one half of our island, it is reasonable that the more beautiful moie of his majesty's subjects should establish a trace. Addison.

TO MOIL, v. a. [moiller, French.]

1. To daub with dirt.

All they which were lost were moiled with dirt and mire; by reason of the deepness of the rotten way. Knolles.

masters, that in requital break their hearts. Leitch.
Oh the endless misery of the life I lead! cries the moiling husband, to spend all my days in ploughing. Leitch.

Now he must moil and drudge for one he loathes.
Dryden.

With thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
To moil all day, and merry make at night. Cay.

MOIST, adj. [moiste, moite, French.]

1. Wet, not dry; wet, not liquid; wet in a small degree.

The hills to their supply
Vapour, and exhalation dusk and moist, Sent up amon. Milton.

Why were the moist in number so outdone,
That to a thousand dry they are but one. Pope.

Many who live well in a dry air, fall into all the difficulties that depend upon a relaxation in a moist
one. Asbuthnot.

Nor yet, when moist Arcturus clouds the sky,
The woods and fields their pleasing toils deny. Pope.

2. Juicy; succulent. Ainsworth.

TO MOIST, v. a. [from moist.] To make damp; to make wet to a small degree; to damp.

indifferent ear: is determined only by the moments of truth, and to retract his past errors. Norris.

3. An indivisible particle of time.

If I would go to hell for an eternal moment, or so,
I could be knifed. Shakespeare.

The mighty purpose never is o'erlooked,
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment
The very firings of my heart shall be
The firings of my hand. Shakespeare.

The imaginary reasoning of brutes is not a distinct reasoning, but performed in a physical moment. Hale.

While I a moment mope, a moment's pa-
I'm nearer death in this verse than the last.

What time is to be done? Be wife with speed;
A fool at forty is a fool indeed. Young.

Yet thus receiving and returning bliss
In the great moment, in this golden now,

When every trace of what, or when, or how,
Should from my soul by raging love be torn. Prior.

MOMENTALLY, adv. [from momentum,
Lat.] At a moment.

Art but momentally remaining in our bodies, hath no proportionable space for its convection, only of length enough to refrigerate the heart. Brown.

MOMENTANEOUS, adj. [from momentum,
Lat.] Lasting but a moment.

Small difficulties, when exceeding great good is sue to cause, and, on the other side, momentary benefits, when a hurt which they draw after them is unavoidable, are not at all to be respected. Hooker.

Flame above is durable and confident; but with us it is a transitory momentum. Bacon.

Source could the shady king
The horrid turn of his intentions tell,

But the swift as the momentary wing
Of lightning, or the words he spoke, left hell. Craft.

MOMENTARY, adj. [from moment, Lat.] Last-

To betray heady husbands, rob the only

And lend the monies on return of lust. Ben Jonson.

Money differs from monies silver, in that the quantity of silver in each piece of money is determined by the stamp it bears, which is a public contract. Locke.

My discourse to the hen-peck'd has produced many contentments, such a discourse is expected etc., and every married man's money. Johnson.

Shall I withhold a little money or food from my fellow creature, for fear he should not be good enough to receive it from me? Locke.

People are not obliged to receive any monies, except of their own coinage by a public mint. Scott.

Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye; miscellaneous, or massed.

MONGER. n. f. [mangere, Sax, a trader; from mangian, Sax, to trade.] A dealer; a seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity to express a seller of that commodity: as, a fishmonger; and sometimes a medler in any thing: as, a whoremonger; a newsmonger.

Do you know me?—Yes, excellent well, you are a fishmonger. Shakespeare
The impatient flatterer-monger.

Could now count in himself no longer. Hudibras

MONGRAL. adj. [us mongcorn, from mang, Sax. or mungen, to mix, Dutch.] Of a mixed breed: commonly written mangrel for mangrel.

This zealot
Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clerick before, and lay behind. Hudibras
Ye mongrel work of heav'n, with human shape,
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice. Dryden

I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden
Bully, groveling, worthless wretches,
Mongrel in faction; poor faint-hearted traitors,
Lad! Johnson

His friendships still to few confin'd,
Were always of the muddling kind;
No fools of rank, or mongrel breed,
Who turn would pass for lords indeed. Swift

MONIMEST. n. f. [from moner, Lat.] It seems here to signify inscription.

Some others were driven and dissent
Into great mists and to wedges square,
Some in round plates withouten monument. Spenser

To MONISH. v. a. [monico, Lat.] To admonish, of which it is a contraction.

Monish him gently, which shall make him both willing to mended, and glad to go forward in love. Alfham

MONISHMENT. n. f. [from monish.] An admonishment; a monitor.

MONITION. n. f. [monitio, Lat. monition, French.]

1. Information; hint.
We have no visible monition of the returns of any other periods, such as we have of the day, by successive light and darkness. Hobbes on Time

2. Instruction; document.
Unruly ambition is dead, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counsels and monitions of reason itself. L'Estrange

Then after sage monitions from his friends,
His talents to employ for nobler ends,
He turns to politics his dangerous wit. Saunders

MONITOR. n. f. [Lat.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent; be but his scholar, and you are safe. Paccon

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untainted, to carry his monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conference as might be its own caution.
South

We can but divine who it is that speaks; whether Perdus himself, or his friend and monitor, or a third person. Dryden

The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitions to us to beware of greater mischiefs. Locke

MONITORIAL. adj. [monitoire, Fr. monitorius, Lat.] Conveying useful instruction; giving admonition.

Colles, interchanges, and disappointments, are monitorial and instructive. L'Estrange

He is so taken up still, in spite of the monitorial shot in my essay with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pope

MONITORIAL. n. f. Admonition; warning.

A king of Hungary took a bishop in battle, and kept him prisoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitorial to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon

MONK. n. f. [monec, Sax. monachus, Lat. monachus.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain obligations.

'Twould prove the verity of certain words,
Spoke by a holy monk. Shakespeare

Abbot meek, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Almonition monk. Knolles

The drench monks, the scorn and shame of mankind.

Route and prepare once more to take possession,
And settle in their ancient lives again. Rome

Monks, in some respects agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects, monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are. Aylmer

MONKERY. n. f. [from monk.] The monastic life.

Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous servitude of their rule and impotent votaries, nor the inconveniences of their monkery. Hall

MONKEY. n. f. [monikin, a little man.]

1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.

One of them showed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey: Tis true, it was my turquoise, I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Shakespeare

More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakespeare

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, destroy their young ones by their fondness. Locke

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they dote,
But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granville

2. A word of contempt, or slight kindness.

This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her. Shakespeare

Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father?
Shakespeare

MONKHOOD. n. f. [monk and hood.] The character of a monk.

He had left off his monkhood too, and was no longer obliged to them. Atterbury

MONKISH. adj. [from monk.] Monastic; pertaining to monks; taught by monks.

Those public charities are a greater ornament to this city than all its wealth, and do more real honour to the reformed religion, than redounds to the church of Rome from all those monkish and superstitious foundations of which the vanity boasts. Atter-

Rule, life, Rule common, see the Benedictine rule.
The dull constraint of monkish rhyme refine. South

MONKS-HOOD. n. f. [consolida regalis.] A plant.

MONKS-RHUBARB. n. f. A species of dock;
its roots are used in medicine.

MONOCHORD. n. f. [μόνος and χορδή.]

1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet machine. Harris

2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of founds.

The ancients made use of the monochord to determine the proportion of sounds to one another. When the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diapentes; if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatessérons;
if as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce-major; but if as six to five, then they called it a diesis-ton, or a tierce-minor; and lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or diese, the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harris

MONOCULAR. } adj. [μόνος and oculus.] MONOCULOUS. } One-eyed; having only one eye.

He was well served who, going to cut down an ancient white hawthorn tree, which, because the budded before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular. Houel

Those of China repute the rest of the world monocular. Granville

MONODY. n. f. [μονωδία; monodie, Fr.] A poem sung by one person not in dialogue.

MONOGAMIST. n. f. [μόνος and γάμος;
monogame, Fr.] One who disallows second marriages.

MONOGAMY. n. f. [monogamie, Fr. μόνος and γάμος.] Marriage of one wife.

monogramme, Fr.] A cipher; a character compounded of several letters.

MONOLOGUE. n. f. [μόνος and λόγος; monologue, Fr.] A scene in which a person of the drama speaks by himself; a soliloquy.

He gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country, in monologue; to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. Dryden

MONOMACHY. n. f. [μονομαχία; μόνος and μάχη.] A duel; a single combat.

MONOME. n. f. [monome, Fr.] In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name; as, a, b, a b, a a b. Harris

MONOPETALOUS. adj. [monopetale, Fr.
μόνος and πέταλον.] It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, howsoever they may be seemingly cut into many small ones, and those fall off together. Quincy

MONOPOLIST. n. f. [monopolcur, Fr.] One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

To MONOPOLIZE. v. a. [μόνος and πωλίσ;
monopolcur, Fr.] To have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

He has such a prodigious trade, that if there is not some stop put, he will monopolize; nobody will tell a yard of drapery, or mercery ware, but himself.

Abchurch

MONOPOLY. n. f. [μονοπωλία; monopoli,
Fr. μόνος and πωλίσ.] The exclusive privilege of selling any thing.

If I had a monopoly on't they would have part on't.
Shakespeare

How could he answer't, should the state think fit,
To question a monopoly of wit? Cowley

One of the most oppressive monopolies imaginable, all others can concern only something without us, but this touches upon our nature, yea upon our reason. Government of the Tongue

Shakespeare rather writ happily than knowingly and justly; and Jonson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, yet seemed to envy to posterity that knowledge, and to make a monopoly of his learning. Dryden

MONOPTOTE. n. f. [μόνος and πίπτει.] A noun used only in some one oblique case.

Clarke's Latin Grammar

MONOTICH. n. f. [μόνος and τίχον.] A composition of one verse.

ble*.] Consisting of words of one syllable.

MONOSYLLABLE. n. f. [monosyllable,
Fr. μόνος and σλλαβή.] A word of only one syllable.

My name of Ptolemy!
It is so long it takes an hour to write it:

MON

I'll change it into Jove or Mars!
Or any civil monosyllable,
That will not tire my hand.

Poets, although not insensible how much our language was already over-stocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses.

Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy.

MONOSYLLABLED. adj. [monosyllabe, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.

Nine taylor, if rightly spell'd,
Into one man are monosyllabled.

MONOTONY. n. f. [monotonia; μόνος and τόνος; monotonie, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.

I could object to the repetition of the same rhymes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony.

MONSIEUR. n. f. [Fr.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.

A Frenchman his companion;

An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
A Gallian gull.

MONSOON. n. f. [monsoon, monsoon, Fr.]

Monsoons are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for half a year one way, others but for three months, and then shift and blow for six or three months directly contrary.

The monsoons and trade winds are constant and periodical even to the thirtieth degree of latitude all around the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds.

MONSTER. n. f. [monstre, Fr. monstrum, Latin.]

1. Something out of the common order of nature.

Methinks heroic poeësie till now,
Like some fantastic lary land did dwell,
Gods, devils, nymphs, witches, and giants race,
And all but man in man's chief work had place.
Thou like some worthy knight with sacred arms,
Dost drive the monster's tience, and end the charms.

It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they are derived.

2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.

If she live long,

And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters.

All human virtue to its last breath,
Finds Envy never conquer'd but by death:
The great Alcides, ev'ry labour past,
Had still this monster to subdue at last.

To MONSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things.

Not in use.

Her offence

Must be of such unnatural degree
That monsters it.

I had rather one scratch my head i' th' sun,
When the alarm was struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd.

MONSTROSITY. n. f. [from monstrous.]

MONSTROUSITY. n. f. The state of being monstrous, or out of the common order of the universe. Monstrosity is more analogous.

This is the monstrosity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd.
Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrosity.

We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrosity in education: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast.

MON

By the same law monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness the case of hermaphrodites.

MONSTROUS. adj. [monstreux, Fr. monstruosus, Latin.]

1. Deviating from the slated order of nature.

Nature there perverse,
Brought forth all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Hydras, and gorgons, and chimeras dire.

Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals.

2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.

Is it not monstrous that this player here
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his concert,
That, from her working, all his visage wan'd?

O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of tack.

3. Irregular; enormous.

No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,
The whole at once is bold and regular.

4. Shocking; hateful.

This was an invention given out by the Spaniards, to have the monstrous from their nation received.

MONSTROUS. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.

Oil of vatril and petroleum, a dram of each, torn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top.

She was easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again.

Add, that the rich have full a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor.

MONSTROUSLY. adv. [from monstrous.]

1. In a manner out of the common order of nature; shockingly; terribly; horribly.

Tiberius was bad enough in his youth, but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age.

2. To a great or enormous degree.

And that self-chain about his neck,
Which he forewent most monstrously to have.

These truths with his example you disprove,
Who with his wife is monstrously in love.

MONSTROUSNESS. n. f. [from monstrous.]

Enormity; irregular nature or behaviour.

See the monstrousness of man,
When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!

MONTANT. n. f. [Fr.] A term in fencing.

Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?
--To see thee fight, to see thee pass thy punts,
thy shock, thy montant, thy distance, thy montant.

MONTERO. n. f. [Spanish.] A horseman's cap.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero.

MONTEITH. n. f. [from the name of the inventor.] A vessel in which glasses are washed.

New things produce new words, and thus Monteth has by one vessel saved his name from death.

MONTH. n. f. [monat, Sax.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiack: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the expiration of your month.

Sojourn with my sister.

From a month old even unto five years old.

Months are not only lunar, and measured by the moon, but also solar, and terminated by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptick.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemned by fate
To daily death.

MONTH'S mind. n. f. Longing desire.

You have a month's mind to them.

For it a trumpet sound, or drum beat,
Who has not a month's mind to combat?

MONTHLY. adj. [from month.]

1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.

I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite.

2. Happening every month.

The youth of heavenly birth I view'd,
For whom our monthly victims are renew'd.

MONTHLY. adv. Once in a month.

If the one may very well monthly, the other may as well even daily, be iterated.

I swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That changes monthly in her circl'd orb;
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

MONTOIR. n. f. [Fr.] In horfemanship, a stone as high as the stirrups, which Italian riding-masters mount their horses from, without putting their foot in the stirrup.

MONTROUS. n. f. An under-gunner, or assistant to a gunner, engineer, or fire-masser.

MONUMENT. n. f. [monument, Fr. monumentum, Latin.]

1. Any thing by which the memory of persons or things is preserved; a memorial.

In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Julius.

He is become a notable monument of unprincipled disloyalty.

So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Of monument to ages; and thereon
Offer sweet-smelling gums.

Of ancient British art
A pleasing monument, no less admir'd
Than what from Attick or Eusebian hands Arose.

Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings.

2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.

On your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.

The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
Shall on his monument their odours throw.

In a heap of slain,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd

Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument.

With thee on Raphael's monument I moum,
Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn.

MONUMENTAL. adj. [from monument.]

1. Memorial; preserving memory.

When the sun burns to bug
His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring
To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak.

The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind.

The pulch'rd pillar different sculptures grace,
A world containing monumental traits. Pope
2. Raised in the hour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.

Perversehood keeps honour bright:
To have decay is to hang quite out of fashion
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shaksp.
I'll not fear that whiter skin of her than snow,
And smooth as monumental slabs. Shaksp.
Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Soitly may he be poss'it
Of his monumental rest. Crahan.

MOOD, n. f. [mode, Fr. modus, Lat.]
1. The form of an argument.
Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. the universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts Aristotle reduced our logic reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mood and figure.
Baker.

2. Style of music.
They move
In perfect phalanx, to the Dorian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton.
Their sound seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint.
Milton.

3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood. Clarke.
4. [from mod, Gothic; mod, Sax. moed, Dutch; and generally in all Teutonic dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.
The trembling ghost, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and fuming wide
With fiery eyes. Fairy Queen.
The kindly beast upon her jangling food,
With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood.
Fairy Queen

Eyes unbind to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shaksp.
Florida changed to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her vermeil cheeks depart. Fairy Soliman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Knollys.
She was in fittest mood
For cutting corn, or letting blood. Hodibras.
These two knits C' appeals his angry mood
I bear, of which the furies give him good. Dryd.
He now prostate of tears,
In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addis.

5. Angry; rage; heat of mind. Mod, in Gothic, signifies habitual temper.
That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; yet in them mood they eat forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must be contented. Hooker.

MOODY, adj. [from mood.]
1. Angry; out of humour.
How now, moody? Shaksp.
What is't thou canst demand?
Chide him rev'ently,
When you perceive his blood incline to mirth;
But being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shaksp.
Every peevish, moody male content
Shall fit the fencer's rabble in an upour. Rouse.

2. Mental; intellectual: mod in Saxon signifies the mind.
Give me some muck; muck, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shaksp.

MOON, n. f. [mun; mena, Gothic;
mena, Saxon; mona, Icelandic; maene, Denish; mane, German; muen, Dutch.]

1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phoebe.
The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as this.

When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shaksp.
Diana bath her name from moon, which is the property of the moon, being by name cold and moist, and is termed to be a cold's humours. Peacham.
Beneath the mighty ocean's wealthy caves,
Beneath the eternal firmament of waves,
Where the salt coast the moon's waters keep,
And undisturb'd by moons in flocks creep. Conkey.
Ye moon and stars bear witness to the truth!
Denton.

like a half-moon, by which, and his odd traile'd shape, he is sufficiently distinguished. Grew.
MOONLESS, adj. [from moon.] Not enlightened by the moon.
Alighted by a transient, one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden MOONLIGHT, n. f. [moon and light.] The light afforded by the moon.
Their bishop and his clergy, being departed from them by moon-light, to choose in his room any other bishop, had been in altogether impossible.
Hooker.
Thou hast by moonlight at her window sang,
With leaping voice, series of fervent love. Shaksp.
MOONLIGHT, adj. Illuminated by the moon.
If you will patiently dwell in our round,
And let our moonlight revels go with us. Shaksp.
What beck'ning doth about the moonlight shade invites my steps, and points to yonder glade? Pope.
MOONSTED, n. f. [mentipsum, Lat.]
The moonstede hath a rofaceous flower, the pointal is divided into three parts at the top, and afterward becomes the fruit or berry, in which is included one flat seed, which is, when ripe, hollowed like the appearance of the moon. Miller.

MOONSHINE, n. f. [moon and shine.]
1. The lustre of the moon.
Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out.
Shaksp.
I, by the moonshine, to the windows went:
And, ere I was aware, light'd to myself. Dryden.
2. [In buileque.] A month.
I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
Lag of a brother. Shaksp.

MOONSHINE, } adj. [moon and shine.] Il-

As when thick mists arise from moory vales. Fairfax.

In Essex, moory-land is thought the most proper.
Mortimer.

MOOSE. n. f. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.

To MOOT. v. a. [from mootian, moot, gemoot, meeting together, Saxon; or perhaps, as it is a law term, from mot, French.] To plead a mock cause; to flate a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the inns of court at appointed times.

Moot case or point. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.

In this moot case your judgement to refuse,
Is present death. Dryden.
Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moot point, who understands nothing of our laws? Locke.

Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moot point, whether I am more likely to make a mafter Bull, or you a mafter Strutt. Arbuthnot.

MO'OTED. adj. Plucked up by the root.

MO'OTER. n. f. [from moot.] A disputer of moot points.

MOP. n. f. [mappa, Welsh; mappa, Lat.]

1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.

Such is that sprinkling which some careless queen
Flirts on you from her mop, but not to clean.
You fly, invoke the Gods; then turning, flap
To rail; the singing still whirls on her mop. Swift.

2. [perhaps corrupted from mock.] A wry mouth made in contempt.
Each one tripping on his toe
Will be here with mop and mow. Shakespeare.

To MOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.

To MOP. v. n. [from mock.] To make wry mouths in contempt.

Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of Jest, of Obduracy; Hobbsiden, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of feeling; Mohu, of murder; and Fibber-tiggibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since possesses chamber-maids. Shakespeare.

An ass fell a mopping and braying at a lion. L'Eg.

To MOPE. v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant day-dream; to be spiritless, inactive and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious.

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers.
Shakespeare.

Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling fans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not to mope. Shakespeare.

Ev'n in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither. Shakespeare.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
Demomack phreury, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness. Milton.

The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind,
Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
Care only wakes, and moping peniveness;
With meagre discontented looks they sit,
And watch the wailing of the midnight taper. Rowe.

M O R

To MORE. v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.

They say there are charms in herbs, said he, and so threw a handful of grass; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped. L'Estrange.

Severity breaks the mind; and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke.

MORE-EYED. adj. Blind of one eye. Ainl.

MO'PPEY. n. f. [perhaps from mop.] A puppet made of rags, as a mop is made; a fondling name for a girl.

Our sovereign lady: made for a queen?
With a globe in one hand, and a sceptre in t'other.
A very pretty moppet! Dryden.

MO'PUS. n. f. [A cant word from mope.] A drone; a dreamer.

I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes
But a rabble of tenants. Swift.

MORAL. adj. [moral, Fr. moralis, Lat.]

1. Relating to the practice of men toward each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal, good or bad.

Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker.
Laws and ordinances positive he distinguishes from the laws of the two tables, which were moral.
Hooker.

In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide life; but in supernatural it alone guideth. Hooker.

Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,
Mankind is broken loose from moral bands;
No rights of hospitality remain,
The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain. Dryden.

2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.

France's reads, his banners in our noisels land,
With plumed helm the flay'r begins his threats,
Whit thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and crest. Shakespeare.

3. Popular; customary; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.

Physical and mathematical certainty may be infallible; and moral certainty may properly be stiled indubitable. Withins.

We have found with a moral certainty, the feat of the Mosical shyls. Barnet.

Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillot.

A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particular which are contained under the universal subject. Watts.

MORAL. n. f.

1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life: this is rather a French than English sense.

Their moral and astronomy,
Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.

2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction;
the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.

Benedictus? why benedictus? you have some moral in this benedictus.

—Moral! No, by my troth I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy thistle. Shakespeare.
Expound the meaning of moral of his signs and tokens. Shakespeare.

The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the ground-work of his instruction; the fable formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden.

I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable,
but could do nothing that pleased me. Swift to Gay.

To MORAL. v. n. [from the adjective.]
To moralize; to make moral reflections.
Not in use.

M O R

When I did hear

The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanicleer.
That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shak.
MORALIST. n. f. [moraliste, Fr.] One who teaches the duties of life.

The advice given by great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

MORALITY. n. f. [moralité, French; from moral.]

1. The doctrine of the duties of life;
ethicks.

The system of morality to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift.

A necessity of living is as impossible in morality,
as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Hak.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The morality of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South.

To MORALIZE. v. a. [moraliser, Fr.]

1. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He has left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.
—I pray thee moralize them. Shakespeare.

Did he not moralize this spectacle?
—O yes, into a thousand humors. Shakespeare.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb.
L'Estrange.

2. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Pierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize my song. Spenser.

3. In Prior, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, it indeed it has any sense.

High as their trumpet's tune his lyre he string,
And with his prince's arms he moralized his song.
Prior.

To MORALIZE. v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

MORALIZER. n. f. [from moralize.] He who moralizes.

MORALLY. adv. [from moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally so called, honour, honesty ought chiefly to be understood, and that the good of profit or pleasure, the less a title of juncundum, hardly come into any account here. South.

Because then of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of prescription, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally.
Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgment made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L'Estrange.

I am from the nature of the things themselves morally certain, and cannot make any doubt of it, but that a mind free from passion and prejudice is more fit to pass a true judgment than such a one as is assailed by affection and interest. Hakker.

The common accounts of many such with flowers and moralities, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible, that these things should be false.
Atterbury's Sermon.

MORALS. n. f. [without a singular.] The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their morals as vice could make them, have yet been solicitous to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up. South.

Learn then what morals crickets ought to show :
Tis not enough wit, art, and learning join ;
In all you speak, let truth and candour shine. Pope.
MORAL'S. n. f. [moralis, Fr.] Fen; bog ;
moor.

Landscapes point out the fairest and most fruitful spots, as well as the rocks, and wildernesses, and moor of the country. Watts.

Seeing a great many in rich morning gowns, he was amazed to find that persons of quality were up so early. Addison.

MORNING-STAR. n. f. The planet Venus when she shines in the morning.

Bright as doth the morning-star appear,
Out of the east, with flaming locks bedight,
To tell the dawning day is drawing near. Spens.

MOROSE. adj. [morosus, Latin.] Sour of temper; peevish; fullen.

Without these precautions, the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows fullen and morose, the woman impudent. Spectator.

Some have deserved censure for a morose and affected taciturnity, and others have made speeches, though they had nothing to say. Watts.

MOROSELY. adv. [from morose.] Sourly; peevishly.

Too many are as morosely positive in their age, as they were childishly so in their youth. Government of the Tongue.

MOROSENESS. n. f. [from morose.] Sourness; peevishness.

Take care that no moroseness and moroseness mingle with our serious frame of mind. Nelson.

Learn good humour, never to oppose without just reason; abate some degrees of pride and moroseness. Watts.

MOROSITY. n. f. [morositas, Lat. from morose.] Moroseness; sourness; peevishness.

Why then be ted,
But entertain no morosity, brothers, other Than a joint burden laid upon us. Shakspere.

Some morosities
We must expect, since jealousy belongs
To age, of scorn, and tender sense of wrongs. Dean.

The pride of this man, and the popularity of that;
the levity of one, and the morosity of another. Claren.

MORPHEW. n. f. [morpheus, Fr. morpheus, low Lat. morpha, Italian.] A scurf on the face.

MORRIS. } n. f. [that is moorish or moorish-dance.]

1. A dance in which bells are ginged, or flaves or swords clashed, which was learned by the Moors, and was probably a kind of Pyrrhick or military dance.

The queen stood in some doubt of a Spanish invasion, though it proved but a morris-dance upon our waves. Watson.

One in his catalogue of a feigned library, sets down this title of a book, The morris dance of heretics. Bacon.

The sounds and seas, with all their sunny drive,
Now to the moon in wavering morris move. Milton.

I took delight in pieces that shewed a country village, morris-dancing, and peasants together by the side. Peucham.

Four reapers danced a morris to oaten pipes. Spectator.

2. Nine mens MORRIS. A kind of play with nine holes in the ground.

The folds stand empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatted with the murrain flock;
The nine mens morris is filled up with mud. Shaksp.

MORRIS-DANCE. n. f. [morris and dance.] One who dances à la morisco, the moorish dance.

MOR

There went about the country a set of morris-dancers, composed of ten men, who danced, a maid marian and a tabor and pipe. Temple.

MORROW. n. f. [morgen, Saxon; morghen, Dutch. The original meaning of morrow seems to have been morning, which being often referred to on the preceding day, was understood in time to signify the whole day next following.]

1. The day after the present day.

I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
To have't with saying good morrow. Shakspere.

Canst pluck night from me, but not lend a morrow. Shakspere.

The Lord did that thing on the morrow. Exodus.
Peace, good reader, do not weep,
Peace, the lovers are asleep;
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night is gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with the light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crowham.

To morrow you will live, you always cry,
In what far country doth this morrow lie?
That 'tis so mighty long e'er it arrive:
Beyond the Indies does this morrow live?
'Tis so far fetch'd thus morrow, that I fear
'Twill be both very old, and very dear.
To morrow will I live, the fool does say,
To day itself's too late, the wife liv'd yesterday. Cowley.

2. To MORROW. [This is an idiom of the same kind, supposing morrow to mean originally morning: as, to night; to day.] On the day after this current day.

To morrow comes; 'tis noon; 'tis night;
This day like all the former flies;
Yet on he runs to seek delight
To morrow, till to night he dies. Prior.

3. To morrow is sometimes, I think improperly, used as a noun.
Our yesterday's to morrow now is gone,
And still a new to morrow does come on.
We by to morrows draw out all our store,
Till the exhausted well can yield no more. Cowley.
To morrow is the time when all is to be rectified. Spectator.

MORSE. n. f. [phoca.] A sea-horse.
That which is commonly called a sea-horse is properly called a morse, and makes not out that shape. Brown.

It seems to have been a tusk of the morse or walrus, called by some the sea-horse. Woodward.

MORSEL. n. f. [morcellus, low Latin; from morfus.]

1. A piece fit for the mouth; a mouthful.

Yet canst thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully din'd before, Shakspere.
And me his parent would full soon do you
For want of other prey, but knows that I Should prove a bitter morsel, and his hate. Milton.
Every morsel to a famish'd hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South's Sermons.

He boils the fl-fl,
And lays the mangled morrels in a dish. Dryden.

A wretch is pusher under,
Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the rav'ous foe
In morrels cut to make it farther go. Tate.

A letter to the keeper of the lion requested that it may be the first morsel put into his mouth. Addison.

2. A piece; a meal.
On these herbs, and fruits and flowers,
Feed first, on each breast next, and fish and fowl.
No homely morrels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A dog crossing a river with a morsel of flesh in his mouth, saw, as he thought, another dog under the water, upon the very same adventure. L'Estrange.

3. A small quantity. Not proper.

Of the morrels of native and pure gold, he had seen some weighed many pounds. Boyle.

MORSURE. n. f. [morjure, Fr. morfura, Lat.] The act of biting.

MORT. n. f. [morte, French.]

MOR

1. A tune founded at the death of the game.

To be making practis'd smiles,
As in a looking-glass, and to sigh as 'twere
The mort of th' deer; oh that is entertainment
My bosom likes not. Shakspere.

2. [morgt, Hindick.] A great quantity.
Not in elegant use, but preserved colloquially in many parts.

MORTAL. adj. [mortalis, Lat. mortel, Fr.]

1. Subject to death; doomed sometime to die.

Nature does require
Her times of preservation, which perforce,
I her frail son amongst my brethren mortal
Must give my attendance to. Shakspere.
This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor.
Heav'nly powers, where shall we find such love!
Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
Man's mortal crime; and just, th' unjust to save. Milton.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgrest, inevitably thou shalt die;
From that day mortal: and this happy state Shalt lose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Deadly; destructive; procuring death.

Come all you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unless me here,
And fill me from the crown to th' toe, top full
Of cruelty. Shakspere's Macbeth.
The mortalest poisons practis'd by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Bacon.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and till our woe. Milt.
Some circumstances have been great disconcerters of trade, and others are absolutely mortal to it. Temple.

Hope not, base man! unquitted hence to go,
For I am Palamon, thy mortal foe. Dryden.

3. Bringing death.

Safe in the hand of one disposing power,
Or in the natal, or the mortal hour. Pope.

4. Inferring divine condemnation; not venial.

Though every sin of itself be mortal, yet all are not equally mortal, but some more, some less. Perkins.

5. Human; belonging to man.

They met me in the day of success; and I have learned by the perfectest report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. Shakspere.

Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakspere.

The voice of God
To mortal ear is dreadful, they in speech,
That Moses might report to them his will,
And terror to all. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,
On fire fit hand can always hit. Butler.

No one enjoyment but is liable to be lost by a thousand accidents, out of all mortal power to prevent. South's Sermons.

6. Extreme; violent. A low word.

The birds were in a mortal apprehension of the hottles, till the sparrow reasoned them into understanding. L'Estrange.

The nymph grew pale and in a mortal fright,
Spent with the labour of so long a flight,
And now dropping, cast a mournful look Upon the fire man. Dryden.

MORTAL. n. f.

1. Man; human being.

Wary poor mortals left behind. Tieckel.

2. This is often used in ludicrous language.

I can behold no mortal now;
For what's an eye without a brow? Prior.

MORTALITY. n. f. [from mortal.]

1. Subjection to death; state of a being subject to death.

When I saw her die,
I then did think on your mortality. Carr.

I point out mistakes in life and religion, that we might guard against the springs of error, guilt, and sorrow, which surround us in every state of mortality.

Watts.

2. Death.

I beg mortality,
Rather than life preferred with misery. Shaksp.
Gladly would I meet Mortality my sentence. Milton.

3. Power of destruction.

Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Lave in thy tongue and heart. Shaksp.

4. Frequency of death.

The rule of keeping those accounts first began in the year 1592, a time of great mortality. Guarant.

5. Human nature.

A single vision to transports them, that it makes up the happiness of their lives, mortality cannot bear it often. Dryden.

Take those tears, mortality's relief,
And till we share your joys, forgive our grief. Pope.

MORTALLY. adv. [from mortal.]

1. Irrecoverably; to death.

In the battle of London you were not only dangerously, but, in all appearance, mortally wounded. Dryden.

2. Extremely; to extremity. A low ludicrious word.

Adrian mortally envied poets, painters, and arti-ficers, in works wherein he had a vein to excel. Bacon.

Know all, who would pretend to my good grace,
I mortally dislike a damning face. Granville.

MORTAR. n. f. [mortarium, Lat. mortier, French.]1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.

I except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and pound it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war. Bacon.

The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the comminution of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar. Ray on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon out of which bombs are thrown.

It is a mortar which for nine centuries had bray'd
The wrath of time on the stone engrav'd,
Now only a mortar stand yet undefac'd.
On which trophies by thy valour rais'd. Granville.

MORTAR. n. f. [morter, Dutch; mortier, Fr.]

Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mix'd up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick. Wolfius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubb'd, yet not so dry, as to soil the water it is wash'd in. He also faults with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and be before they use it, therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not be long before it be used.

I will treat this unbolted villain into mortar, and dash the salt of jokes with him. Shaksp.

They had brick for stone, and lime for mortar. Gongora.

Lime hot out of the kiln mix'd soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.

MORTGAGE. n. f. [mort and gage, Fr.]1. A dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.

The estate runs out, and mortgages are made,
Their antique run, and their name betray'd. Dry.

The commons do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbuthnot.

The broker,
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks bye-streets, and saves th' expensive coach,
Gay.

2. The state of being pledged.

The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year. Bacon.

To MORTGAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To pledge; to put to pledge; to make over to a creditor as a security.

Let men contrive how they may disentangle their mortgag'd souls. Deany of Ficty.

They make the widow's mortgag'd ox their prey. Sundys.

Their not abating of their expensive way of living, has forced them to mortgage their best members. Arbuthnot.

Some have his lands, but none his treasur'd store, Lands unmanur'd by us, and mortgag'd o'er and o'er. Harte.

MORTGAGEE. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that takes or receives a mortgage.

An act may pass for publick registers of land,
by which all purchasers or mortgagors may be secured of all monies they lay out. Temple.

MORTGAGER. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that gives a mortgage.

MORTIFEROUS. adj. [mortifier, Lat.] Fatal; deadly; destructive.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from to dead, so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hamm.

These mourning herbs, like a mortiferous herb, are poisonous even in their first spring. Ouv. of the Tong.

MORTIFICATION. n. f. [mortification, Fr.
from mortify.]

1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.

It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by opiates, or milder cures. Bacon.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immediate,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene,
To black mortification. Milton.

2. Destruction of active qualities.

Inquire what gives impediment to union or resiti-tution, which is called mortification; as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine. Bacon.

3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.

A diet of some fish is more rich and alkalescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification. Arbuthnot.

4. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.

The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable. Tillotson.

You see no real mortification, or self denial, no eminent charity, no profound humility, no heavenly affection, no true contempt of the world, no Christian weakness, no sincere zeal, or eminent piety, in the common lives of Christians. Jun.

5. Vexation; trouble.

It is one of the vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disorder'd by a tedious visit. L'Estrange.

We had the mortification to lose the sight of Munich, Augsburg, and Ratisbon. Addison.

To MORTIFY. v. a. [mortifier, Fr.]

1. To destroy vital qualities.

2. To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.

What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification, as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine or spirit. Bacon.

He mortified pearls in vinegar, and drank them up. Hakevall.

Oil of tartar per deliquium has a great faculty to find out and mortify acid spirits. Boyle.

3. To subdue inordinate passions.

The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too. Shakspere.

Suppress thy bawling pride,
Mortify thy learned lust,
Vain are thy thoughts, while thou thyself art dust. Prior.

He modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride. Swift.

4. To macerate or harash; in order to reduce the body to compliance with the mind.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakspere.

We mortify ourselves with fast, and think we fare courteously if we abstain from flesh. Brown.

Mortify'd he was to that degree,
A poorer than himself he would not see. Dryden.

With fasting mortify'd, worn out with tears,
And bent beneath the load of seventy years. Harte.

5. To humble; to deprecate; to vex.

Let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shaksp.

He is controuled by a nod, mortified by a frown, and transported by a smile. Addison.

How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise to high as he thinks they ought. Addison.

To MORTIFY. v. n.

1. To gangrene; to corrupt.

Try it with capon laid abroad, to see whether it will mortify and become tender sooner; or with dead flies with water cast upon them, to see whether it will putrefy. Bacon.

2. To be subdued; to die away.

3. To practise religious severities.

This makes him careful of every temper of his heart, give alms of all that he hath, watch, and fast, and mortify, and live according to the strictest rules of temperance, meekness and humanity. Law.

MORTIFY. n. f. [mortaise, mortoise, Fr.]

A hole cut into wood that another piece may be put into it and form a joint.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise. Shakspere.

Under one skin are parts variously mingled, some with cavities, as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit cavities. Ray.

To MORTIFY. v. a.

1. To cut a mortise; to join with a mor-tise.

'Tis a maffy wheel,
To whose huge spoke ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoin'd. Shakspere.

The walls of spiders legs are made,
Well mortis'd and finely bud. Drayton.

2. It seems in the following passage improperly used:

The one half of the ship being finished, and by help of a scrow launched into the water, the other half was joined by great brass nails mortified with lead. Arbuthnot.

MORTMAIN. n. f. [morte and main, Fr.]

Such a state of possession as makes it unalienable; whence it is said to be in a dead hand, in a hand that cannot shift away the property.

It were meet that some small portion of lands were allotted, since no more mortmain are to be look'd for. Spenser.

MORTPAY. n. f. [mort and pay.] Dead pay; payment not made.

This parliament was merely a parliament of war, with some statutes conducing thereto; as the severe punishing of mortpayers, and keeping back of soldiers wages. Bacon.

MORTRESS. n. f. [from mortier de sageffe.
Skinner.] A dish of meat of various kinds beaten together.

A mortress made with the brawn of capons, stamped, strained, and mingled with like quantity of almond butter, is excellent to nourish the weak. Bacon.

M O S

MORTUARY. n. f. [mortuaire, Fr. mortuarium, Lat.] A gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the recompense of his personal tithes and offerings not duly paid in his lifetime. Harris.

MOSAICK. adj. [mosaïque, Fr. supposed corrupted from mosaicus, Lat.]

Mosaick is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cockles, and shells of sundry colours; and of late days likewise with pieces of glass figured at pleasure; an ornament in truth, of much beauty, and long life, but of most use in pavements and floorings. Wotton.

Each beautiful flower,

Tris all hues, roses, and jessamins,
Kear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought

Mosaick. Milton.
The most remarkable remnant of it is a very beautiful mosaick pavement, the floor I have ever seen in marble; the parts are so well joined together, that the whole piece looks like a continued picture. Adams.

MOSCHATEL. n. f. [moschatellina, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

MOSQUE. n. f. [mosquée, Fr. moschit, Turkish.] A Mahometan temple.

MOSS. n. f. [muscus, Lat. moor, Sax.] A plant.

Though moss was formerly supposed to be only an excrement produced from the earth's ditches, yet it is no less a perfect plant than those of greater magnitude, having roots, flowers, and seeds, yet cannot be propagated from seeds by any art. The botanists distinguish it into many species: it chiefly flourishes in cold countries, and in the winter season, and is many times very injurious to fruit trees. The only remedy in such cases is to cut down part of the trees, and plough up the ground between those left remaining; and in the spring, in moist weather, you should with an iron instrument scrape off the moss. Miller.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees; but it may be better sort of a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining ozers tenc'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.

Such mosses as grow upon walls, roofs of houses, and other high places, have seeds that, when taken out of their vessels, appear like vapour or smoke. Ray on the Creation.

To Moss. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with moss.

An oak whole boughs were moss'd with age,
And high-top bald with dry antiquity. Shakespeare.

Will there a g'd tree,
That have out-liv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out. Shakespeare.

MOSSY. n. f. [from mossy.] The state of being covered or overgrown with moss.

The herbs withered at the top, sheweth the earth to be very cold, and to do the mossiness of trees. Bacon.

MOSSY. adj. [from mossy.] Overgrown with moss; covered with moss.

Old trees are more mossy far than young, for that the top is not so frank as to rise all to the boughs, but first by the way, and putteth out moss. Bacon.

About the mossy brooks and springs,
And all inferior beautiful things. Cowley.

The mossy tountains and the sylvan shades Delight no more. Pope.

MOST. adj. the superlative of more. [maest, Sax. moet, Dutch.]

MOTWHAT. adv. [moet and what.] For the most part. Obsolete.

God's promises being the ground of hope, and those promises being but seldom absolute, motwhat conditionate, the christian grace of hope must be proportioned and temperate to the promise: if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tyranny of hope. Hosmond.

MOTION. n. f. Act of moving. Diet.

MOTE. n. f. [moet, Sax. atomus, Lat.] A small particle of matter; any thing proverbially little.

You found his mote, the lance your mote did pierce.
But I a bean do find in each of three. Shakespeare.

The little motes in the sun do ever stir, though there be no wind. Locke.

MOTT. for mught or myft. [moet, Dutch.] Obsolete.

Most ugly despoil.

Such as dame Nature left most fair to see,
Or came, that ever should to foul decay
From her moist enamour'd hand be reap'd. Spenser.

MOTH. n. f. [moet, Sax.] A small winged insect that eats cloths and hangings.

All the yare Penelope is in Ulysses' absence, did but fill Itasca's tale of moth. Shakespeare.

Every soldier in the war should do as every sick man in his bed, wash every moth out of his conscience. Shakespeare.

He as a rotten thing consumeth, as a garment that is moth eaten. Job.

M O T

Let moths through pages eat their way,
Your wars, your loves, your praises be forgot,
And make of all an universal blot. Dryden.

MOTHER. n. f. [moeder, Sax. moder, Danish; moeder, Dutch.]

1. A woman that has born a child; correlative to son or daughter.

Let thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness. Shakespeare.

Come sit down every mother's son,
And rehearse your parts. Shakespeare.

I had not so much of man in me,
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears. Shakespeare.

2. That which has produced any thing.

Alas, poor country! It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave. Shakespeare.

The resemblance of the constitution and diet of the inhabitants to those of their mother country, occasions a great similitude in the popular diseases. Arbuthnot.

The strongest branch leave for a hand, cutting off the rest close to the body of the mother plant. Motimer.

3. That which has preceded in time; as, a mother church to chapels.

4. That which requires reverence and obedience.

I grow a statue, stiff and motionless.

Dryden.

Should our globe have had a greater share
Of this strong force, by which the parts cohere;
Things had been bound by such a pow'ful chain,
That all would fix'd and motionless remain.

Blackm.

MOTIVE, adj. [motivus, Lat.]

1. Causing motion; having moment.
Shall every motive argument used in such kind of conferences be made a rule for others still to conclude the like by, concerning all things of like nature, when as probable inducements may lead them to the contrary?

Hooker.

2. Having the power to move; having power to change place; having power to pass foremost to motion.

The nerves serve for the conveyance of the motive faculty from the brain; the ligatures for the strengthening of them, that they may not flag in motion.

Willans.

We ask you whence does motive vigour flow?

Blackmore.

That fancy is easily disproved from the motive power of souls embodied, and the gradual increase of men and animals.

Bentley.

MOTIVE, n. f. [motif, French.]

1. That which determines the choice; that which incites the action.

Hence we have no commandment, either in nature or Scripture, which doth exact them at our hands; yet those motives there are in both, which draw most effectually our minds unto them.

Hooker.

Why in that rawness left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave-taking?

Shakespeare.

What can be a stronger motive, to a firm trust in our Maker, than the giving us his son to suffer for us?

Addison.

The motive for continuing in this same state is only the present satisfaction in it; the motive to change is always some uneasiness.

Locke.

2. Mover. Not in use.

Psalms.

At this my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place.

Job.

2. To give an impulse to.
He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
My motions in him; longer than they move;
His heart I know, how variable and vain
Self-left.

Milton.

The pretext of piety is but like the hand of a clock, set indeed more conspicuously, but directed wholly by the secret movings of carnality within.

Dreay of Puty.

The will being the power of directing our operative faculties to some action, for some end, cannot at any time be moved towards what is judged at that time in attainable.

Locke.

3. To propose; to recommend.
If the first consultation be not sufficient, the will may move a review, and require the understanding

Gratus offered the Tranlylvannus money; but minds desirous of revenge were not moved with gold.

Knolles.

Sometimes the possibility of preferment prevailing with the credulous, expectation of less expense

MOV

with the covetous, opinion of safe with the fond, and assurance of remoteness with the kind parents, have moved them without discretion, to engage their children in adventures of learning, by whose return they have received but small contentment. Watson.

Could any power of sense the Roman move
To burn his own right hand? Davies.

That which moves a man to do any thing, must be the apprehension and expectation of some good from the thing which he is about to do. South.

When the law her reasons idly spent,
And could not move him from his fix'd intent,
She flew to rage. Dryden.

But when no female arts his mind could move,
She turn'd to furious hate her impious love. Dryd.
What can thy mind to this long journey move,
Or need'st thou absence to renew thy love? Drud.

5. To affect; to touch pathetically; to stir passion.

If he see aught in you that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will. Shaksp.

It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
To let him live; where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Shakespeare.

Should a shipwreck'd sailor sing his woe,
Would'st thou be mov'd to pity, or below
An almshouse? Dryden's Persius.

Images are very sparingly to be introduced: their proper place is in poems and orations, and their use is to move pity or terror, compassion and resentment. Felton on the Cliffs.

O let thy sister, daughter, handmaid move,
Or all those tender names in one, thy love. Pope.

They, as they move
Their stately dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, towards his all-cheering lamp. Milton.

10. To move, v. n.

1. To be in a state of changing place; not to be at rest.

Whether heav'n move or earth
Imports not, if thou reckon right. Milton.

The senses represent the earth as immovable; for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glanville.

2. To have a particular direction of passage.

The sun
Had first his precept to move, to shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat. Milton.

3. To go from one place to another.

I look'd toward Buraam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

On the green bank I sat and listen'd long,
Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
But wou'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryd.

This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.

When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move, but seems to be a perfect entire circle of that matter. Locke.

The goldefs moves
To visit Paphos, and her blooming groves. Pope.

MOULD, n. f. [morgel, Swedish.]

1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.

All metals are incursions of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.

Mould is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better sort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or putrefaction, for all putrefaction, if it dissolve not in action, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon's Natural History.

The malt made in summer is apt to contract mould. Mortimer.

A merchant, who has been shut up in himself in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his airs have awkwardness in them. Watts.

2. [mo'lb, Saxon.] Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.

The moulds that are of a bright chestnut or hazel colour are accounted the best; next to that the dark grey and yellow moulds are reckoned the worst, such as are usually found on common or heathy ground: the clear tawny is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but yew, furz, and fern. All good land, after rain, or breaking up by the spade, will emit a good smell; that being always the best that is either toounctious or too lean, but such will easily dissolve; of a just confidence between sand and clay. Milner.

MOU

Though worms devour us, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my flesh I shall live here behold. Sundya.
The black earth, every where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.

Wherein this trunk was form'd. Shakespeare.
You may have fruit to more accurate figures, according as you make the moulds. Bacon.

The liquid ore he dropp'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
Earth his own tools; then what might else be wrought Futile, or grav'd in metal. Milton.

We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as it this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and corrupt parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.

Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.
Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
Are cast the several kinds of precious stone. Blackmore.

5. Cast; form.

No mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Shaksp.

ners of youth into what shape we please, and give them the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
Of dull and venal a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold. Daniel.

A faction in England, under the name of puritan, moulded up their new schemes of religion with republican principles in government. Swift.

*For you alone he stole
The fire that forms a manly soul;
Then, to complete it every way,
He moulded it with female clay. Swift.

Fabellists would never learn any moral lessons till they were moulded into the form of some fiction or fable like those of Æsop. Watts.

2. To knead; as, to mould bread. Ainsk.

MOULDABLE, adj. [from mould.] That may be moulded.

The differences of figurable and not figurable, mouldable and not mouldable, are plebeian notions.
Bacon's Natural History.

MOULDER, n. s. [from mould.] He who moulds,

To MOULDER, v. n. [from mould.] 'To be turned to dust; to perish in dust; to be diminished; to wear or waste away.

word of comparison.

Excellent speech! he cometh not a fool, much he is do lying lips a prince. Proverbs.

We have had fathers of our flesh which corrupted us, and we gave them reverence, shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? Hebrews.

If they escaped not who refused him that spoke on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven. Hebrews.

Full of doubt I stand,
Whether I should repent me now of sin
By me done or occasioned, or repent Much more, that much more good thereof shall spring. Milton.

Patron of intercessor gone appear'd,
Much less that durst upon his own head draw
The deadly forfeiture. Milton.

2. To a certain degree.
He charged them that they should tell no man, but the more he charged them, to much the more a great deal they published it. Mark.

There is, said Michael, if thou well observe,
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught. Milton.

3. To a great degree.
Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much, bent rather how I may be quit
Forever and end it of this combous charge. Milton.

So spoke, to with'd much humbled Eve, but fate Subter'd not. Milton.

Somewhat w'd, I took with holy fear,
Yet not to much but that I noted well
Who did the most in song and dance excel. Dryden.

To thee thy much-afflicted mother flies,
And on thy succour and thy faith relies. Dryden.

Your much-lov'd fleet shall soon
Besiege the petty monarch's of the land. Dryden.

It is his rule of reason he not better than his rules for health, he is not like to be much followed. Baker.

Oh much expens'd man!
Sad from my natal hour my days have run,
A much afflicted, much enduring man. Pope.

4. Often, or long.
You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh. Dry.

Homer shall last, like Alexander, long,
As much recorded, and as often sung. Granville.

5. Nearly.
All left the world much as they found it, ever unquiet, subject to changes and revolutions. Temple.

MUCH. n. f.

1. A great deal; multitude in number; abundance in quantity; opposed to a little.

They gathered against Moses and Aaron, and said,
Ye take too much upon you. Numb. 16.

Nor grudge I thee the much the Grecians give,
Nor murmur I take the little I receive. Dryden.

They have much of the poetry of Meccenas, but little of his liberality. Dryden.

The fate of love is such,
That still it fees too little or too much. Dryden.

Much fulling becomes next their honours claim,
Those of it a noisy and let's guilty fame. Pope.

cannot know all things, we shall do much what as wisely as he who would not use his legs because he had no wings to fly. Locke.

Unless he can prove cohabitation a man or a woman, this Latin will be much what the same with a solecism. Atterbury.

MUCH is often used in a kind of composition with participles both active and passive: when it is joined with a passive, as much loved, it seems to be an adverb; when it is joined with an active, as much enduring, it may be more properly considered as a noun.

MUMMY. n. f. [munie, Fr. mumia, Lat., derived by Salmagius from amumum, by Bochart from the Arabic.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two substances for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spices; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damp: this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is prepared in vials, or fall'd to dry: the first kind is brought in large pieces, of a friable texture, light and spongy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second, in its liquid state, is a thick, opaque, and viscid fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell in its undisturbed state it is a thick, slimy substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort so cheap, that we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of any bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding sloes, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be sold: in an oven till the juices are exhaled and the embalming matter has penetrated.

The fixt
Was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful Confer'd of maiden hearts. Shakespeare.

It is strange how long carcases have continued un-fly: flies being eager of those grapes.]

A kind of sweet grape, sweet wine, and sweet pear.

He quaffs off the muscadell,
And threw the tops all in the sexton's face. Shak.

MUSCLE, n. f. [muscle, Fr. musculus, Lat.
muscula, Sax.]

1. Muscle is a bundle of thin and parallel plates of fleshy threads or fibres, included by one common membrane: all the fibres of the same plate are parallel to one another, and tied together at extremely little distances by short and transverse fibres: the fleshy fibres are composed of other smaller fibres, enclosed likewise by a common membrane: each lesser fibre consists of very small vessels or bladders, into which we suppose the veins, arteries, and nerves to open; for every muscle receives branches of all those vessels, which must be distributed to every fibre: the two ends of each muscle or the extremities of the fibres are, in the limbs of animals, fastened to two bones, the one moveable, the other fixed; and therefore, when the muscles contract, they draw the moveable bone according to the direction of their fibres.

Quincy.
The instruments of motion are the muscles, the fibres whereof, contracting themselves, move the several parts of the body. Locke.

2. A bivalve shellfish.

Of shell-fish, there are wrinkles, limpets, cockles, and muscles. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

1. Full of muscles; brawny.

2. Pertaining to a muscle.

The uvea has a muscular power, and can dilate and contract that round hole, called the pupil of the eye, for the better moderating the transillumination of light. Morre.

MUSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Deep thought; close attention; absence of mind; brown study.

The tidings strange did him abashed make,
That still he sat long time astonished
As in great muse, no word to creature spoke. Fairy Queen.

He was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse, to hear
Of things so high and strange. Milton.

2. The power of poetry.

Begin my muse.
The muse-inspired train Triumph, and raise their drooping heads again. Waller.

Lodona's fate, in long oblivion cast,
The muse shall sing, and what the songs shall last. Pope.

TO MUSE. v. n. [musere, Fr. musen, Dut. musso, Latin.]

1. To ponder; to think close; to study in silence.

If he spoke courteously, he angled the people's hearts; if he were silent, he mus'd upon some dangerous plot. Sidney.

St. Augustine, speaking of devout men, noteth, how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they give unto the chapters read; how careful they were to remember the same, and to muse thereupon by themselves. Hooker.

When he hath wad of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his life on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses. Shakespeare.
My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and my heart
Muse of understanding. Psalms.

Her face upon a sudden glittered, so that I was afraid of her, and mus'd what it might be. 2 Esd.
All men mus'd in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not. Luke.

On those he mus'd within his thoughtful mind. Dryden.

MUSHROOM. n. f. [muscheron, French.]

1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered.

The true champignon or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and exaltate themselves almost to a stink, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour: in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young mushrooms; these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot-beds. Milner.

2. An upstart; a wretch risen from a dunghill.

Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unown'd; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon.

Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
The lowly native of a country town. Dryden.

MUSHROOMSTONE. n. f. [mushroom and stone.] A kind of fossil.

Fifteen mushroomstones of the same shape. Woodward.

MUSICK. n. f. [musica; musique, Fr.]

1. The science of harmonical sounds, The man that hath no musick in himself, Nor is not mov'd with concert of sweet sounds, Is fit for treasons.

Now look into the musick-master's gaze,
Where noble youth at vast expense is taught,
But eloquence not val'd at a great. Dryden.

2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.

When she spoke,
Sweet words, like dropping honey, the dill died;
And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly broke A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make. Fairy Queen.

Such musick
Before was never made,
But when of old the fount of morning sung. Milton.
By musick minds an equal temper know,
Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
Warriours the fires with animated foam is,
Fours balin into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.
We have dancing-masters and musick-masters. Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. Entertainments of instrumental harmony. What musick, and dancing, and diversions, and songs, are to many in the world, that prayers and devotions, and psalms are to you. Law.

MUSICAL. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick] 1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.

The merry birch
Chanted above their cheerful harmony,
And made amongst themselves a sweet comfort,
That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort. Fairy Queen.

Sweet bird that shunn'd the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy;
Thou chaunt'st oft the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.

Neither is it enough to give his author's sense,
In poetical expressions and in musical numbers. Dryden.

2. Belonging to musick. Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern musick. Addison.

MUSICALLY. adv. [from musical.] Harmoniously; with sweet sound.

Valentine, musically coy, Shun'd Phædra's arms. Addison.

MUSICALNESS. n. f. [from musical.] Harmony.

MUSICIAN. n. f. [musicus, Lat. musicien, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of musick.

Though the musicians that should play to you,
Stand in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet strait they shall be here. Shakespeare.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakespeare.

A painter may make a better face than ever was;
but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in quick, and not by rule. Damon's Essay.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sing;
Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young. Dryden.

MUSK. n. f. [muschio, Italian; musc, Fr.] A dry, light, and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity: its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochinchina: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat, but taller: the bag which contains the musk is three inches long, and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly. Hill.

Some putrefactions and excrements yield excellent odours, as civet and musk. Bacon.

I th' war,
Their insidies and revolts, wherein they shew'd
Most valour, spoke not for them. Shakespeare.

In most strange postures We've seen him set himself. Shakespeare.

— I here's a mutiny in a mind. Shakespeare.

Lets than if this frame
Of heav'n were falling, and these elements
In mutiny had from her axle torn
The steadfast earth. Milton.

Soldiers grow pernicious to their master who becomes their servant, and is in danger of their mutinies, as much as any government of seditions. Temp.

TO MUTTER. v. n. [mutire, muffle, Lat.] To grumble; to murmur.

What would you ask me, that I would deny,
Or stand to mutter ring on? Shakespeare.

How! what does his cashier'd worship mutter? Shakespeare.

Sky low'd, and mutt'ring thunder some sad drops
Wept, at completing of the mortal sin Original! Milton.

They may trespass, and do as they please; no man dare accuse them, not so much as mutter against them. Burton.

Bold Britons, at a brave bear-garden fray,
Are rous'd; and clatt'ring sticks cry, play, play,
play;
Mean time your filthy foreigner will stare,
And mutter to himself, ha, gas, barbare!
And it is well he mutters, well for him;
Our butchers else would tear him limb from limb. Dryden.

When the tongue of a beautiful female was out out, it could not forbear muttering. Addison.

TO MUTTER. v. a. To utter with imperfect articulation; to grumble forth.

Amongst the soldiers this is muttered;
That here you maintain several factions. Shaksp.

A kind of men, to loose of soul,
That in their sleep will mutter their affairs. Shaksp.

Your lips have spoken lies, your tongues hath muttered perverseness. Shaksp.

A hateful prattling tongue,
That blows up jealousies, and heightens fears,
By muttering poisonous whispers in men's ears. Crook.

MUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Murmur; obscure utterance.

Without his rod rev'rend,
And backward mutters of dissembling power,
We cannot free the lady. Milton.

MUTTERER. n. f. [from mutter.] Grumbler; murmurer.

MUTTERINGLY. adv. [from muttering.]

With a low voice; without distinct articulation.

MUTTON. n. f. [mouton, Fr.]

1. The flesh of sheep dressed for food.

The fat of roasted mutton or beef, falling on the birds will baste them. Swift's Direct. to the Cook.

2. A sheep. Now only in ludicrous language.

Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons. Shakespeare.

The flesh of muttons is better tasted where the sheep feed upon wild thyme and wholesome herbs. Bacon.

Within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward.

MUTTONFIST. n. f. [mutton and fist.] A hand large and red.

Will he who saw the soldiers muttonfist,
And saw thee maul'd, appear within the list
To witness truth? Dryden.

MUTUAL. adj. [mutuel, Fr. mutus, Lat.]

Reciprocally; each acting in return or correspondence to the other.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
If they perchance but hear a trumpet sound,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
By the sweet power of music. Shakespeare.

What should most excite a mutual flame,
Your rural cases and pleasures are the same. Pope.

MUTUALLY. adv. [from mutual.] Reciprocally; in return.

He never bore
Like labour with the rest; where th' other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And mutually participate. Shakespeare.

Dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answered my affection. Shaksf.
The tongue and pen mutually assist one another, writing what we speak, and speaking what we write. Holder.

Pellucid substances act upon the rays of light at a distance, in refracting, reflecting, and infecting them, and the rays mutually agitate the parts of those substances at a distance for heating them. Newton.
They mutually teach, and are taught, that lesson of vain confidence and fecundity. Atterbury.

May I the sacred pleasures know
Of strictest amity, nor ever want
A friend with whom I mutually may share Gladness and anguish. Philips.

MUTUALITY. n. f. [from mutual.] Reciproproction.

Villanous thoughts, Rodrigo! when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the incorporate conclusion. Shakespeare.

MUZZLE. n. f. [muzeau, Fr.]

1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.

But ever and anon turning her muzzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a furlet to any weak lover's thumach. Sidney.

Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the muzzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun. Clerke.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, for the fire with the tongue; if the tongue be not at hand, use the muzzle of the bellows. Swift's Rules to Serv.

2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.

The fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks
The muzzle of refrant; and the wild dog Shall beth his tooth on ev'ry innocent. Shaksf.

Greyhounds, inow fair,
And tall as flags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;

With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound.
Dryden.

TO MUZZLE. v. n. To bring the mouth near.

The bear muzzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him. L'Estrange.

TO MUZZLE. v. a.

1. To bind the mouth.

This butcher's cur is venom mouth'd, and I Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore beth Not wake him in his slumber. Shakespeare.

The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bow'r,
And muzzled though they seem, the mutes devour.
Dryden.

Through the town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear. Gay.

2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.

The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child. L'Estrange.

3. To restrain from hurt.

My dagger muzzled
Lest it should hurt its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shakespeare.

MY. pronoun possessive. [See MINE.]

Belonging to me. My is used before a substantive, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both. My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.

Her feet the in my neck doth place. Spenser.
I conclude my reply with the words of a Christian poet. Bramhall.

If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection. Waller.

I shall present my reader with a journal. Addison.

MYNCHEN. n. f. [mynchen, Sax.] A nun.

MYOGRAPHY. n. f. [μυογραφία.] A defiscription of the muscles.

MYOLOGY. n. f. [μυολογία, Fr.] The description and doctrine of the muscles.

To instance in all the particulars, were to write a whole system of myology. Chryse.

MYOPY. n. f. [μυωψία.] Shortness of sight.

MYRIAD. n. f. [μυριάς.]

1. The number of ten thousand.

2. Proverbially any great number.

Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief.

Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tillotson.

Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapes. Prior.

MYRMIDON. n. f. [μυρμιδών.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the foldiers of Achilles.

The mass of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curius, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and composed of their own representatives. Swift.

MYROBALAN. n. f. [myrobalanus, Latin.]

A fruit.
The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste: they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preferred. Hill.
The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures;
for it is sweet, and yet an astringent. Bacon.

MYROPOLIST. n. f. [μυροπολίτης and πωλίτης.]

One who sells unguents.

MYRRH. n. f. [myrrha, Lat. myrrhē, Fr.]

A gum.

Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper-corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow:
its taste is bitter and acrid, with a peculiar aromatic flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown.
Our myrrh is the very drug known by the anti-cients under the same name. Hill's Materia Medica.

The myrrh sweet bleeding in the bitter wound.

I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wifeman.

MYRRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Lat.] Made of the myrrhine stone.

How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups imbols'd with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton.

MYRTIFORM. adj. [myrtus, Latin, and form.] Having the shape of myrtle.

MYRTLE. n. f. [myrtus, Lat. myrte, Fr.]

A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.
The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rose; upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short star-like cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

There will I make these beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle
Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakespeare.

I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea. Shakespeare.

Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted, though a good space one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peacham.

Nor can the moist the gallant Sidney pass
The plume of war! with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Thomson.

MYSELF. n. f. [my and self.]

1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it, that is, not I by proxy;
not another.

As his host,
Who should against his murth'rer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Shakespeare.

2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique case.

They have misfed another pain, against which I should have been at a loss to defend myself. Swift.

3. I is sometimes omitted, to give force to the sentence.

Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
And try to gain his pardon. Addison.

MYSTAGOGUE. n. f. [μυσταγωγός; mysta- gogus, Lat.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relics, and shews them to strangers. Bailey.

MYSTERIARCH. n. f. [μυστήριος and ἀρχή.]

One presiding over mysteries.

MYSTERIOUS. adj. [mystericus, Fr. from mystericus.]

1. Inaccessibile to the understanding; awfully obscure.

God at last
To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms. Milton.

Then the true Sun of knowledge first appear'd,
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd. Denham.

2. Artfully perplexed.

Those princes who were distinguished for mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift.

MYSTERIOUSLY. adv. [from mysterious.]

1. In a manner above understanding.

2. Obscurely; enigmatically.
Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Taylor.

Each fair mysteriously was meant. Milton.

MYSTERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from mysterious.]

1. Holy obscurity.
My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Taylor.

2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.

TO MYSTERIZE. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.

Mysterizing their enigmas, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiac. Brown.

MYSTERY. n. f. [μυστήριον; mystere, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries, which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare.

Upon holy days let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add to the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Taylor.

If God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the Trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them, unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift.

M Y S

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.
To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter. Shakespeare.
Important truths shall let your fables hold,
And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.
 3. A trade; a calling; in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mystery, from myster, French, a trade. And that which is the noblest mystery, Brings to reproach and common infamy. Spenser.
Instruction, manners, mysteries and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakspeare.
- MYSTICAL. } adj. [mysticus, Lat.] MYSTICK. }
1. Sacredly obscure.
Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor, concerning the mystical way to heaven. Hooker.
From salvation all flesh being excluded this way,
God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker.
 2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical.

M Y T

- Ye five other wand'ring freat! that move
In mystick dance, not without song, resound
His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light. Milton.
- It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical. Taylor.
It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire. Burnet.
3. Obscure; secret.
Left new fears disturb the happy state,
Know, I have search'd the mystick rolls of fate. Dryden.
- MYSTICALLY. adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning.
These two in thy sacred bosom hold,
Till mystically join'd but one they be. Donne.
- MYSTICALNESS. n. f. [from mystical.] Involvement of some secret meaning.
- MYTHOLOGICAL. adj. [from mythology.] Relating to the explication of fabulous history.
The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by

M Y T

- tradition flow into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality. Brown.
- MYTHOLOGICALLY. adv. [from mythological.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.
- MYTHOLOGIST. n. f. [from mythology.] A relator or expounder of the ancient fables of the heathens.
The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings. Creech.
It was a celebrated problem among the ancient mythologists, What was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest? Norris.
- TO MYTHOLOGIZE. v. n. [from mythology.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.
- MYTHOLOGY. n. f. [μῦθος and λογία; mythologic, Fr.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.
The model of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance; it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia. Bentley.

N

N A I

- N Is a semivowel, and has in English an invariable sound: as, no, name, net; it is sometimes after m almost lost; as, condemn, contemn.
- TO NAB. v. a. [nappa, Swedish.] To catch unexpectedly; to seize without warning.
A word seldom used but in low language.
- NA'CKER, or NAKER. n. f. [concha margaritifera, Lat.] A shell that contained a pearl.
- NADIR. n. f. [Arabick.] The point under foot directly opposite the zenith.
As far as four bright signs comprize,
The distant zenith from the nadir lies. Creech.
- NAFF. n. f. [mergus cirrhatius.] A kind of tufted sea bird.
- NAG. n. f. [nagge, Dutch.]
1. A small horse. A horse in familiar language.
A hungry lion would fain have been dealing with good horse-flesh; but the nag would be too fleet. L'Estrange.
Thy nags, the leanest things alive,
So very hard thou lov'st to drive. Prior.
 2. A paramour: in contempt.
Your ribaud nag of Egypt
Hoists sails and flies. Shakspeare.
- NAIL. n. f. [naxl, Sax. nagel, German.]
1. The hard crust or horny substance at the ends of the fingers and toes.
My nails can reach unto thine eyes. Shakspeare.
The meanest sculptor in th' Æolian square,
Can imitate in brass the nails and hair;
Expert in trusses. Dryden.
The nails of our fingers give strength to those parts; the various functions they are put to; and defend the numerous nerves and tendons that are under them. Key.
 2. The talons of birds; the claws or paws of beasts.

N A I

3. A spike of metal, by which things are fastened together.
As one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object soon forgotten. Shakspeare.
For the body of ships, no nation doth equal England, nor for the oaken timber to build them; and we need not borrow iron for spikes or nails, to fasten them together. Bacon.
The load-stone mines in the shore of India are so placed in abundance and vigour, that it proves an adventure of hazard to pass those coasts in a ship with iron nails. Brown.
A beechen pail
Hung by the handle on a driven nail. Dryden.
An equivocal word used for the nail of the hand or foot, and for an iron nail to fasten any thing. Watts.
 4. A stud; a boss.
For not the desk, with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.
 5. A measure of length; two inches and a quarter.
 6. On the nail. Readily; immediately; without delay. I once supposed it from a counter fludded with nails, but have since found in an old record, solvere super unguem. It therefore means into the hand.
We want our money on the nail,
The banker's ruin'd if he pays. Swift.
- TO NAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with nails.
To the cross he nails thy enemies,
The law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind, with him are crucify'd. Milton.
He clasp'd his hand upon the wounded part.
The second shaft came swift and unesp'y'd,
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.
 2. To stud with nails.

N A K

- In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of your arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.
- NA'ILER. n. f. [from nail.] One whose trade is to forge nails; a nail-maker.
- NA'KED. adj. [nacob, Saxon.]
1. Wanting clothes; uncovered; bare.
A philosopher being naked, in what a wise man differed from a fool? answered, send them both naked to those who know them not, and you shall perceive. Bacon.
He pitying how they stood Before him naked to the air, that now
Must suffer change;
As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton.
 2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprovided.
Hud I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakspeare.
Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords,
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow. Addison.
 3. Plain; evident; not hidden.
The truth appears naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakspeare.
 4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.
Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men, having only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude; but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues. Hooker.
- NA'KEDLY. adv.
1. Without covering.
 2. Simply; merely; barely; in the abstract.
Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulate, as only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that pro-

N A M

party in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in habits.

3. Discoverably; evidently.

So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wife
Thy overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest-sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they die.

Daniel.
Nakedness. n. f. [from naked.]

1. Nudity; want of covering.

My face I'll grime with filth;
And with presteared nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky. Shakespeare.
Nor be their outward only, with the skins
Of beards, but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious! with his robe of righteousness
Attiring, cover'd from his Father's sight. Milton.
I entreat my gentle readers to tow on their tuckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness, but the innocence of their mother Eve. Addison.
Thou to be strong must put off every drest,
Thy only armour is thy nakedness. Prior.

2. Want of provision for defence.

Spies, to see the nakedness of the land are ye come. Genius.

3. Plainness; evidence; want of concealment.

Why seek'st thou to cover with excusa
That which appears in proper nakedness? Shaksp.
Nail. n. f. An awl, such as collar-makers or shoemakers use.
Whole bridle and saddle, whiteleather and nail,
With collars and harness. Tuffin.

NAME. n. f. [nama, Sax. naem, Dutch.]

1. The discriminative appellation of an individual.

What is thy name?
—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
—No: though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.
—My name's Macbeth. Shakespeare.
He called their names after the names his father had called them. Genesis.
Thousands there were in darker fame that dwell,
Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryd.

2. The term by which any kind or species is distinguished.

What's in a name? That which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet. Shaksp.
If every particular idea that we take in, should have a distinct name, names must be endless. Locke.

3. Person.

They hit with women each degen'rate name,
Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryd.

4. Reputation; character.

The king's army was the last enemy the west had been acquainted with, and had left no good name behind. Clarendon.

5. Renown; fame; celebrity; eminence; praise; remembrance; memory; distinction; honour.

What men of name resort to him?
Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
And Race up Thomas with a valiant crew,
And many others of great name and worth. Shaksp.
Visit eminent persons of great name abroad; to tell how the life agreeth with the fame. Bacon.
Here rest thy bones in rich Hesperia's plains,
Thy name, 'tis all a ghost can have, remains. Dryd.
A hundred knights
Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name. Dryd.
These shall be towns of mighty fame,
Tho' now they lie obscure, and lands without a name. Dryden.
But Julius of great name; whose authority is as much valued amongst the modern lawyers as Papinian's was among the ancients. Baker.

6. Power delegated; imputed character.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him. Shakespeare.

7. Fictitious imputation.

When I lay'd with fallacious arts,
Had I ord'rd a treason in my patron's name,
My kinsman fell. Dryden.

8. Appearance; not reality; assumed character.

I'll to him again, in the name of Brook:
He'll tell me all his purpose. Shakespeare.
There is a friend which is only a friend in name. Eccelesiasticus.

9. An opprobrious appellation.

Bids her confess; calls her ten thousand names;
In vain the kneels. Graville.

Like the watermen of Thames
I row by, and call them names. Swift.

To NAME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To discriminate by a particular appellation imposed.

I mention here a son of the king's whom Florizel
I now name to you; and with speed to pace
To speak of Peritha. Shakespeare.
Thou hast had seven husbands, neither wast thou named after any of them. Tobit.
His name was called Jesus, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived. Luke.

Thus was the building left Ridiculous, and the work, Confusion nam'd. Milton.

2. To mention by name.

Accustom not thy mouth to swearing: neither use thyself to the naming of the Holy One. Ecclus.
My tongue could name what'er I saw. Milton.
Those whom the fables name of monstrous size.
Milton.

3. To specify; to nominate.

Did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar. Shaksp.
Bring me him up whom I shall name. 1 Samuel.
Let any one name that proposition, whose terms or ideas were either of them minute. Locke.

4. To utter; to mention.

Let my name be named on them. Genesis.

5. To entitle.

Celestial, whether among the thrones, or nam'd
Of them the highest. Milton.

NAMELESS. adj. [from name.]

1. Not distinguished by any discriminative appellation.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.
The milky way.
Fram'd of many nameless stars. Waller.
Thy requies, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.

2. One of which the name is not known or mentioned.

Little credit is due to accusations of this kind, when they come from suspected, that is, from nameless pens. Atterbury.

Such imagery of greatness all became
A nameless dwelling, and an unknown name. Hart.

NAMELESS. adv. [from name.] Particularly;
specially; to mention by name.

It can be to nature no injury, that of her we say the same which diligent beholders of her works have observed; namely, that she provideth for all living creatures nourishment which may suffice. Hooker.

Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
To none of these, except he be the last;
Namely, some love that drew him out from home. Shakespeare.

The council making remonstrances unto queen Elizabeth, of the continual conspiracies against her life; and namely, that a man was lately taken, who stood ready in a very suspicious manner to do the deed, advised her to go less abroad weakly attended. But the queen answered, that he had rather be dead, than put in custody. Bacon.
For the excellency of the soul, namely, its power of divining in dreams; that several such divinations have been made, none can question. Addison.
Solomon's choice does not only instruct us in that point of history, but furnishes out a very fine moral to us; namely, that he who applies his heart to wisdom, does at the same time take the most proper method for gaining long life, riches, and reputation. Addison.

NAME. n. f. [from name.] One who calls or knows any by name.

One author is a mole to another: it is impossible for them to discover beauties; they have eyes only for blemishes: they can indeed see the light, as is said of their namejakes; but immediately shut their eyes. Addison.

NAP. n. f. [hnæppan, Sax. to sleep.]

1. Slumber; a short sleep. A word ludicrously used.

Mopsa sat swallowing of sleep with open mouth, making such a noise, as no body could lay the stealing of a nap to her charge. Sidney.
Let your bounty take a nap, and I will awake it anon. Shakespeare.

The sun had long since in the lap
Of Thetis, taken out his nap. Hudibras.
So long as I'm at the forge you are still taking your nap. L'Estrange.

2. [hnæppa, Saxon.] Down; villous sub- stance.

Amongst those leaves she made a butterfly
With excellent device and wondrous flight;
The velvet nap, which on his wings doth lie,
Thou filken down with which his back is dight. Spens.
Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and fit a new nap upon it. Shaksp.
Plants, though they have no pickles, have a kind of downy or velvet rind upon their leaves; which down or nap cometh of a subtil spirit, in a soft or fat substance. Bacon.

Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid,
When dust and rain at once his coat invade;
His only coat! where dust conus'd with rain
Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain. Swift.

What is seriously related by Helmont, that four hundred, steep in a vessel that hath wheat in it, will in twenty-one days time turn the wheat into mice without conjuring, one may guess to have been the philosophy and information of some housewife, who had not so carefully covered her wheat, but that the mice could come at it, and were then taken napping just when they had made an end of their good cheer. Bentley.

NAPTAKING. n. f. [nap and take.] Sur- prise; seizure on a sudden; unexpected onset, like that made on men asleep.

Homer speaks of these parts in an ode that may be reckoned among the finest for the naturalness of the thought, and the beauty of the expression. Addison.

NATURE. n. f. [natura, Lat. nature, Fr.]

1. An imaginary being supposed to preside over the material and animal world.

Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law My services are bound. Shakspeare.

When it was said to Anaxagoras, the Athenians have condemned you to die, he said, and nature than thou. Bacon.

I let the possillion nature mount, and let The coachman art be set. Cowley.

Heav'n hollows

At home, I trudge that nature needs. Cowley.

Simple nature to his hope has giv'n,

Beyond the least-top hill an humbler heav'n. Pope.

2. The native state or properties of any thing, by which it is discriminated from others.

Why leap'd the hills, why did the mountains shake,

What aid'd them their fix'd natures to forsake? Cowley.

Between the animal and rational province, some animals have a dark resemblance of the influences of reason; to between the corporeal and intellectual world, there is man participating much of both natures. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The nature of brutes, besides what is common to them with plants, doth consist in having such faculties, whereby they are capable of apprehending external objects, and of receiving pain or pleasure from them. Witkin.

3. The constitution of an animated body.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rd earth,

Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakspeare.

We're not ourselves,

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind

To suffer with the body. Shakspeare.

4. Disposition of mind; temper.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature

To such a benefit, but his unkind daughters. Shakspeare.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,

Whole nature is to suffer from doing harms,

That he suspects none, on whose foolish honesty

My practices ride easy. Shakspeare.

5. The regular course of things.

My end

Was wrought by nature, not by violence. Shakspeare.

6. The compass of natural existence.

If then dam may be judge, the young apes are the most beautiful things in nature. Glanton.

7. The constitution and appearances of things.

The works, whether of poets, painters, moralists, or historians, which are built upon general nature, live for ever; while those which depend for their existence on particular customs and habits, a partial view of nature, or the illustration of fashion, can only be coeval with that which first raised them from obscurity. Reynolds.

8. Natural affection, or reverence; native sensations.

Have we not seen

The murdering son ascend his parent's bed,

Thou' violat'd nature force his way,

And stain the sacred womb where once he lay? Pope.

9. The state or operation of the material world.

He binding nature fast in fate,

Let conscience free and will. Pope.

10. Sort; species.

A dispute of nature caused mischief in abundance betwixt a king and an archbishop. Dryden.

11. Sentiments or images adapted to nature, or conformable to truth and reality.

Only nature can please those tastes which are unprejudiced and refined. Addison.

Nature and Homer were, he found, the same. Pope.

12. Phyticks; the science which teaches the qualities of things.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night, God said, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

13. Of this word which occurs so frequently, with significations so various, and so difficultly defined, Boyle has given an explication, which deserves to be epitomized.

Nature sometimes means the Author of Nature, or natura naturans; as, nature hath made man partly corporeal and partly immaterial. For nature in this sense may be used the word creator.

Nature sometimes means that on whose account a thing is what it is, and is called, as when we define the nature of an angle. For nature in this sense may be used essence or quality.

Nature sometimes means what belongs to a living creature, at its nativity, or accrues to it by its birth, as when we say, a man is noble by nature, or a child is naturally forward. This may be expressed by saying, the man was born so; or, the thing was generated such.

Nature sometimes means an internal principle of local motion, as we say, the stone falls, or the flame rises by nature; for this we may say, that the motion up or down is spontaneous, or produced by its proper cause.

Nature sometimes means the established course of things; as, as nature makes the night succeed the day. This may be termed established order, or settled course.

Nature means sometimes the aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, especially a living one; as when physicians say, that nature is strong, or nature left to herself will do the cure. For this may be used, constitution, temperament, or structure of the body.

Nature is put likewise for the system of the corporeal works of God; as there is no phreux or chimera in nature. For nature thus applied, we may use the word, or the universe.

Nature is sometimes indeed commonly taken for a kind of tendency. In this sense it is best not to use it at all. Boyle's Free Enquiry.

NATIVITY. n. f. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. Not used.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause, which we impute not on the second; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto nativity. Boyle.

NATAL. adj. [natal, Fr. natalis, Lat.]

1. Consisting of ships.

Ever unping on the main,

Our natal army had between Spain;

They that the whole world's commerce disign'd,

To NEIGH. v. n. [hnanagan, Sax. negan, Dutch.] To utter the voice of a horse or mare.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shakespeare.

They were as fed horses, every one neigh'd. Jeremiah.

Run up the ridges of the rocks again;
And with shrill neighings fill the neighbouring plain. Dryden.

The generous horse, that nobly wild,
Neighs on the hills, and dares the angry lion. Smith.

NEIGH. n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of a horse.

It is the pounce of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage. Shakespeare.

NEIGHBOUR. n. f. [negebur, Sax.]

1. One who lives near to another.

He sent such an addition of foot, as he could draw out of Oxford, and the neighb. using garritious. Clarendon.

A kid sometimes for festivals he flew,
The choicer part was his sick neighbour's due. Harte.

2. One who lives in familiarity with another; a word of civility.

Masters, my good friends, make honest neighbours;
Will you undo yourselves? Shakespeare.

3. Any thing next or near.

This man that set me packing;
Till he got the guts into the neighbour room. Shakespeare.

4. Intimate; confidant.

The deep revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shakespeare.

5. [In divinity.] One partaking of the same nature, and therefore entitled to good offices.

Sins against men are injuries; hurts, losses, and damages, whereby our neighbour is in his dignity, life, chastity, wealth, good name, or any way justly offended, or by us hindered. Locke.

The gospel allows no such term as a stranger; makes every man my neighbour. Spratt.

You should always change and alter your interests, according as the needs and necessities of your neighbours or acquaintance seem to require. Law.

To NEIGHBOUR. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To adjoin to; to confine on.

Wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of sweeter quality. Shakespeare.

Give me thy hand,

Be pilot to me, and thy places shall

Still neighbour mine. Shakespeare.

They grew on the leisurely ascending hills that neighbour the shore. Sandys.

Things of equal value and neighbouring value,

By lot are parted. Prior.

2. To acquaint with; to make near to.

That being of so young days brought up with him,
And since so neighbour'd to his youth and favour. Shakespeare.

NEIGHBOURHOOD. n. f. [from neighbour.]

1. Place adjoining.

One in the neighbourhood mortally sick of the small-pox, desiring the doctor to come to him. Fell.

I could not bear

To leave thee in the neighbourhood of death,

But flew in all the haste of love to find thee. Add.

2. State of being near each other.

Consider several states in a neighbourhood; in order to preserve peace between their states, it is necessary they should be formed into a balance. Swift.

3. Those that live within reach of communication.

How ill mean neighbourhood your genius suits?

To live like Adam midst an herd of brutes! Harte.

NEIGHBOURLY. adj. [from neighbour.]

Becoming a neighbour; kind; civil.

The Scottish lord hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and twice he would pay when he was able. Shakespeare.

The Woodberry so nigh, and neighbourly doth live,

With Abberley his friend. Drayton.

He flouts my customers; twelve he has under bonds never to return; judge if this be neighbourly dealing. Arbutnot.

NEIGHBOURLY. adv. [from neighbour.]

With social civility.

NEITHER. conjunct. [napðen, Sax. ne

either.]

1. Not either. A particle used in the first branch of a negative sentence, and answered by nor.

Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king. 1 Kings.

Men lived at home, neither intent upon any foreign merchandise, nor inquisitive after the lives and fortunes of their neighbours. Heylyn.

2. It is sometimes the second branch of a negative or prohibition to any sentence.

Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it.

Genesis.

This commandment standeth not for a cypher, neither is it read and expounded in vain among Christians. White.

3. Sometimes at the end of a sentence it follows as a negative; and though not very grammatically, yet emphatically, after another negative; in old English two negatives denied.

It is he thought that it is the greatness of distance, whereby the sound cannot be heard, we see that lightning and comets, near at hand, yield no sound neither. Bacon.

Men come not to the knowledge of which are thought innate, till they come to the use of reason, nor then neither. Locke.

NEITHER. pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves,

Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare.

Which of them shall I take?

Both, one, or neither? neither can be enjoy'd

If both remain alive. Shakespeare.

The balance, by a propensity to either side, inclined to neither. Fell.

It suffices that he's dead; all wrongs die with him;

Thus I abhor myself, and excuse him,

Who sav'd my life and honour, but praise neither. Drayton.

Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither. Locke.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother;

but independent of each other. Locke.

NE'NUPHAR. n. f. [nymphæa, Lat.] Water

lily, or water lily.

NEO'PHYTE. n. f. [neophyte, Fr. ne and phus.] One regenerated; a convert.

NEOTERICUS. adj. [neotericus, Lat.] Modern; novel; late.

We are not to be guided either by the misreports of some ancients, or the capricious of one or two neo-cricks. Grew.

NEP. n. f. [nepeta, Lat.] An herb.

NEPENTHE. n. f. [ne and πενθε.] A drug that drives away all pains.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transports

Lull'd with the sweet nepenthe of a count;

There were no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,

Once break their rest, nor stir them from their place. Pope.

NEPHEW. n. f. [nepos, Lat. neveu, Fr.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.

Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;

My brightest nephew and whom best I love. Dryden.

Ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother. Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.

With what intent they were first published, those works of the nephew of Jesus do plainly signify, after that my grandfather Jesus had given himself to the receiving of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and hath gotten thereon sufficient judgment, he proposed also to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom. Hooker.

Her love at length is kind,

Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,

And to his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.

All the sons of these five brethren reign'd

By due success, and all their nephews late,

Even thence eleven descents the crown retain'd. Spenser.

NEPHRETICK. adj. [nephretic; nephre-

tique, Fr.]

1. Belonging to the organs of urine.

2. Troubled with the stone.

The diet of nephretic persons ought to be opposite to the alkalescent nature of the salts in their blood. Arbutnot.

3. Good against the stone.

The nephretic stone is commonly of an uniform

dusky green; but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow. Woodward.

NE'PTOTISM. n. f. [neptotism, Fr. nepos, Lat.]

Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of neptotism Rome owes its present splendour, for it would have been impossible with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families. Addison.

NERVE. n. f. [nervus, Lat. nerf, Fr.]

1. The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body, they have also blood vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve tends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglion or plexus. Quincy.

What man dares, I dare:

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;

Take any shape but that, and my arm nerve?

Shall never tremble. Shakespeare.

2. It is used by the poets for new or sen- don.

If equal powres

Thou would'st intome, smite my nerves, as then

I could encounter with thee hundred men. Chapm.

Strong Tharynea did hug a speeding blow

Full on his neck, and at the nerves in two. Pope.

NE'VELESS. adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,

Had not her sister Satire kept her head. Dunciad.

NE'VOUS. adj. [nerveus, Lat.]

1. Well strung; strong; vigorous.

NES

What nest us arises he boasts, how firm his tread;
His hands his feet, his eyes, his ears, his head.

2. Relating to the nerves; having the seat in the nerves.

The vocal tract, murmuring from afar,
Whisper'd no more to a distant ear;
And I trembled, the firm of the place,
Sung by the windows in vain.

3. [In medical cant.] Having weak or diseased nerves.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures.
NERVY, adj. [from nerve.] Strong; vigorous. Not in use.

Death, that d'uk' (just), in his merry arm doth lie,
Which being advanced, declines, and then men die.

NESCIENCE, n. f. [from nescio, Lat.] Ignorance; the state of not knowing.

Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages,
Have relapsed their knowledge into Socrates his bun-total, and after all their pains in quest of science,
Have sat down in a profound nescience.

NESH, adj. [nepe, Sax.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Skinner.

NES.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality: as, poisonous, poisonousness; turbid, turbidness; lovely, loveliness; from nype, Sax.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from nepe, Sax. a nose of land, or headland.

NEST, n. f. [nepe, Sax.]

1. The bed formed by the bird for incubation and feeding her young.

If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way,
Thou shalt not take the dam with the young.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark,
Above the skies let thy proud music found,
Thy humble nest build on the ground.

2. Any place where animals are produced. Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or repositories.

To NEST, v. n. [from the noun.] To build nests.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nested within his leaves.

NESTEGG, n. f. [nest and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for show,
Like nesteggs, to make clients lay.

To NESTLE, v. n. [from nest.] To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle till succours came.

A cock got into the stable was nestling in the straw among the horses.

The king fisher woots commonly by the water-side, and nestles in hollow banks.

NET

Fluttering there they nettle near the throne,
And lounge in habitations not their own.

The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the finails nettle all the winter.

Nor to the shore approach too nigh,
The modest nettle in the deep.

To freeze you in your paining by.

To NETTLE, v. a.

1. To hurt, as in a net.

That labour'st yet to nettle thee,
Thou think'st by having more to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidden tree.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And netted in his little head.

2. To chide, as a bird her young.

This nettle, so loudly is endur'd
To this Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds.
She, like his mother, nettles him.

NETTLING, n. f. [from nettle.] A bird

just taken out of the nest.

NET, n. f. [natt, Gothick; net, Sax.]

1. A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net, nor line,
The pitfall, nor the gin.

Impatience entangle's us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble.

2. Any thing made with interstitial vacuities.

He made nets of chequered work for the chapters,
Upon the top of the pillars.

The vegetative tubes,
Wrept in a filmy net, and clad with leaves.

NETHER, adj. [neoden, Saxon; neder, Dutch. It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we say the nether part, but never say this part is nether than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems compounded in the word beneath. Nether is not now much in use.]

1. Lower; not upper.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and nether great lip.

Time own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with tear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transform'd.

The upper part whereof was whey,
The nether, orange mix'd with grey.

A beauteous mind above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts.

As if great Atlas from his height
Should sink beneath his heav'nly weight,
And with a mighty flaw, the flaming wall
Should gape no more, and rushing down o'erwhelm this nether ball.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first sublime in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shows you are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge.

Numberless were those bad angels, seen
Hov'ring on wing under the cope of hell,
Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise,
In emulation, opposite to heav'n.

The gods with hate beheld the nether sky,
The ghosts repine.

NETHERMOST, adj. [superl. of nether.]

Lowest.

NEV

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou had delivered my soul from the nethermost hell.

Undam'd to meet there whatever pow'r,
Or spirit, of the nethermost abyss

Might in that noise reside.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very nethermost hell, is, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself could be too good for him.

Heraclitus tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex nethermost.

NETTING, n. f. A reticulated piece of work.

NETTLE, n. f. [netzel, Sax.] A stinging herb well known.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle.
Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That none for them can, when they perish, grieve.

To NETTLE, v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate; to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself.

Although at every part of the apoplexies dilemma to one of them might be wisely and nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was full observed.

NETWORK, n. f. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the intersections.

No any shall'd in workmanship emboss'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fine ring fine,
Might in their device cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare.

A large cavity in the incrust was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network.

Whoever contemplates with becoming attention this curious and wonderful network of veins, must be transported with admiration.

NEVER, adv. [ne ever, naefne, Sax. ne aeppe, not ever.]

1. At no time.

Never, alas, the dreadful name
That feds the infernal flame.

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd;
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd.

Death still draws nearer, never seeming near.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accented, I think with justice, of solecism: as, he is mistaken though never so wise.

It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expell'd thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any; such however is the common use of the word among the best authors.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections be so alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affections of any one part of the body instantly make a transmigration throughout the whole body.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town.

Death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never so slow degrees.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light; and never so near him. Atterbury.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whoever has a friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective. Not any; but in reality it is not ever.

He answered him to never a word; inasmuch that the governor marvelled. Matthew.

5. It is much used in composition: as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature affureth us by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

But a smooth and steadfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combin'd,
Kindle never-dying fires. Carew.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude. Milt.
Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the arts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flow'rs,
Revive and raise themselves with mod'rate show'rs;
But overcharg'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist. Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays. Johnson.

Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays. Dryden.
Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryden.
Fareye, ye never-opening gates. Dryden.

He to quench his drought to much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet stores of food to greedily pursue,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackm.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's felt lay dead. Pope.
What the weak head with thought has rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy crew'd-up front, thy state grimace. Swift.

NEVERTHELESS, adv. [never the less.] Notwithstanding that.

They plead that even such ceremonick of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished. Hooker.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart; nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

NEUROLOGY, n. f. [νεῦρον and λογία.] A description of the nerves.

NEUROLOGY, n. f. [νεῦρον and λογία.] The anatomy of the nerves.

NEUTER, adj. [neuter, Lat. neutre, Fr.]

1. Indifferent; not engaged on either side.

The general division of the British nation is into whigs and tories; there being very few, if any, who stand neuter in the dispute, without ranging themselves under one of these denominations. Addison.

2. [In grammar.] A noun that implies no sex.

The adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make it grammar. Dryden.

A verb neuter is that which signifies neither action nor passion, but some state or condition of being; as, ideo, I sit. Clarke.

NEUTER, n. f. One indifferent and unengaged.

VOL. II.

The learned heathens may be looked upon as neuters in the matter, when all these prophecies were new to them, and their education had left the interpretation of them indifferent. Addison.

NEUTRAL, adj. [neutral, Fr.]

1. Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.

Who can be wife, amas'd, temp'rate and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. Shaksp.
He no sooner heard that King Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral. Bacon.

The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states. Addison.

2. Indifferent; neither good nor bad.

Some things good, and some things ill do seem,
And neutral tone, in her fantastic eye. Davies.

3. Neither acid nor alkaline.

Salts which are neither acid nor alkaline, are called neutral. Arbuthnot.

NEUTRAL, n. f. One who does not act nor engage on either side.

The treacherous who have misled others, and the neutrals and the false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, are to be noted. Bacon.

NEUTRALITY, n. f. [neutralité, Fr.]

1. A state of indifference, of neither friendship nor hostility.

Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of public danger, desert the interest of their fellow-subjects. Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth.

All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the public is embroiled. 'This was the opinion and practice of the later Cato. Swift.

2. A state between good and evil.

There is no health: physicians say, that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality. Dante.

NEUTRALITY, adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on either part.

NEW, adj. [newyd, Welsh; neop, Saxon; neuf, Fr.]

1. Not old; fresh; lately produced, made, or had; novel. New is used of things, and young of persons.

What's the newest crest?—
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shakspere.

2. Not being before.

Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

3. Modern; of the present time.

Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple.

4. Different from the former.

Steadfastly purposing to lead a new life. Com. P.

5. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.

Their names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, not subject to decay,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days. Pope.

6. Not habituated; not familiar.

Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of his reticks, and such as privily will insul their poison into new minds. Hooker.

Seiz'd with wonder and delight,
Gaz'd all around me, new to the transporting sight. Dryden.

Twelve mules, a strong laborious race,
New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace. Pope.

7. Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.

Men, after long emaciated diets, was plump, fat, and almost new. Bacon.

8. Fresh after any thing.

Nor dare we trust to soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryd.

9. Not of ancient extraction.

A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outlines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

NEW, adv. This is, 'I think, only used in composition for newly, which the following examples may explain.

As soon as he had written them, a new swarm of thoughts flung her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney.

God hath not then left this to chuse that, neither would reject that to chuse this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Foreboding up aloft his speckled brow,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Spens.

Your master's lines
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakspere.

Will you with those infinites the oars,
Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her or leave her? Shakspere.

Left by a multitude
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out. Shakspere.

Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I a gasping, new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd. Shaksp.

He saw heav'n blossom with a new born light,
On which, as on a glorious stranger gas'd
The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright
The way to Bethl'hem, and as boldly blaz'd;
Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night. Craheaw.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new born day;
With rosy wings to richly bright,
As it had seem'd to think of night,
When a ruddy storm, whose soul
Made heaven's radiant face look foul, Call'd for an untimely night. Craheaw.

To blot the newly blossom'd light. Craheaw.
Some true, whole broad smooth leaves together
fow'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round—
Thole middle parts, that this new-corner frame,
There fit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

Their father's state,
And new-entrusted sceptre. Milton.
The new-creat'd world, which fame in heav'n Long had foretold. Milton.

His evil
Thou wast, and from thence creaturest more good,
Witness this new-made world, another heav'n. Milt.
All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter
hair,
All in that new-blown age which does inspire Warmth in them, lives, and in beholders fire. Cont.

It could, yet that it should always run them into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashion'd one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined. Ray.

This English edition is not to properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new-moulded. Burnet.

New-found lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery. Burnet.
Let this be nature's frailty, or her fate,
Or Ulysses' counsel, her new-chosen mate. Dryden.

Shewn all at once you dazzled to our eyes,
As new-born Pallas did the gods surprise,
When springing forth from Jove's new-closing wound,
She struck the warlike spear into the ground. Dryd.

1. A small bird that sings in the night with remarkable melody; Philomel.

I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shaksp.

Although the wexon, throte, and tongue, be the instruments of voice, and by their agitations concur in those delightful modulations, yet cannot we align the cause unto any particular formation; and I perceive the nightingale hath some disad-vantage in the tongue. Brown.

Thus the wife nightingale that leaves her home,
Pursuing constantly the cheerful spring,
To foreign groves does her old music bring. Walker.

2. A word of endearment.

NIPPLEWORT. n. f. [lamsana.] A weed.

NISI PRIUS. n. f. [In law.]

A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is pannelled and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the case of the county. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the man impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius differ. So that justices of nisi prius must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county affixed to him. Couell.

NIT. n. f. [nitru, Saxon.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bombous noise, or tickling them in sucking their nits, or eggs, on the hair. Derham.

NITENCY. n. f. [nitentia, Latin.]

1. Lustre; clear brightness.

2. [from nitro, Lat.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles; from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented: that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open. Boyle.

NITING. n. f. [for niding; see NIDING.]

A coward, dastard, poltroon.

NITID. adj. [nitidus; Lat.] Bright; shining; lustrous.

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aquafortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle.

NITRE. n. f. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Lat.]

The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or salt-petre, is a crystalline, pellucid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acid and bitterish taste, imparting a peculiar sense of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it *nitro*s, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, stones, and other solid substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls; these efflorescences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East-Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native salts, being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not. It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, pungent, light, and friable, and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. In Scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an adhesive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this salt, but not with salt-petre, as do many different qualities ascribe to it by the ancients. Hill on English.

Some tumultuous cloud,

Lustre with fire and nitre, hurried him. Milton.

Some steep their feed, and some in cauldrons boil, With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil. Dryden.

NITROUS. adj. [nitreux, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather nitrous fatness more than either of them have severally. Bacon.

NO

The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet stores of cold so greedily puri'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackm.

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the shabby mire, and kennels find. Gay.
NITRILY, adv. [from nitry.] Loudly.

One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nitily needy, and therefore adventurous. Hayward.

NITRY, adj. [from nit.] Abounding with the eggs of lice.

NIVAL, adj. [nivialis, Lat.] Abounding with snow.

NIVEOUS, adj. [niveus, Lat.] Snowy; resembling snow.

NITZY, n. f. [from niais.] A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.

True critics laugh, and bid the trading nisy Go read Quantilian. Anon.

NO, adv. [na, Saxon.]
1. The word of refusal: contrary to yea or yes.

Our courtous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of no woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the seal. Shakspeare.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd,
In rustlet yeas and honest kerly noes. Shakspeare.
If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no. Calamy's Sermons.

2. The word of denial, opposite to concession or affirmation.

I think it would not fort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Bacon.

3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.

My name's Macbeth —
—The Devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.—
—No, nor more fearful. Shakspeare.

Never more
This hand shall combat on the crooked shore:
No; let the Grecian pow'rs oppress in fight,
Unpity'd perish in their tyrant's fight. Dryden.

4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no, not, not even.

No not the bow which to adorns the skies,
So glorious is, or boulds to many dies. Waller.

No, adv.

1. Not any; none.

Let there be no strife between me and thee. Gen.
Some dire misfortune to portend,
No enemy can match a friend. Swift.

Woman and fool are two hard things to hit,
For true no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

No wit to flatter left of all his store,
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shines irradiate, or imblaze the floors. Pope.

Our bard
No common object to your sight displays.
Poor Edwin was no vulgar boy. Beattie.

2. It seems an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where; though sometimes it may be so commodiously changed to not, that it seems an adverb:
as, the days are yet no shorter.

When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel. 1 Samuel.

In vain I reach my feeble hands to join In sweet embraces; ah! no longer thine. Dryden.

notice.

NOTHING, n. s. [no and thing; nothing, Scottish.]

1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation; opposed to something.

It is not certain that there never could be nothing. For if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself, and to was, and not to, before it was. But if there never could be nothing, then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning.

Locke

We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing, we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it.

Bentley

This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense, to wit, say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it, but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is in it.

Watts

2. Nonexistence.

Almighty notes character'd are graced

To display nothing

Shakespeare

3. Not any thing; no particular thing.

Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone.

Addison on the War

4. No other thing.

Nothing but a ready resolution brought to practice, God's grace bestow'd, his commandments obey'd, and his pardon begged, nothing but this will in-tinue you to God's acceptance.

Baker

Words are made to declare something, where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise, they conceal indeed nothing, but that which they conceal is nothing but the greatest error, or sophistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing to be under them.

Locke

5. No quantity or degree.

The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows.

Carleton

6. No importance; no use; no value.

The outward show of churches draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice tools say, there is nothing in the seemingly form of the church.

Spenser

Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught.

Isaiah

7. No possession of fortune.

A most humble shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspokeable estate.

Shakespeare

8. No difficulty; no trouble.

We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts.

Ray

9. A thing of no proportion.

The charge of making the ground, and otherwise, is great, but nothing to the profit.

Faust

10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.

I had rather have one scratch my head if I'll fun, When the alarm was struck, then idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd.

Shakespeare

My dear nothings, take your leave

No longer must you me deceive.

Crahan

'Tis nothing, says the fool, but says the fool,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.

Do I not see your drooping belly swell?

Dryden

That period includes more than a hundred tentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the foregoing perpetual business of having no business to do.

Pope's Letters

Narcissus is the glory of his race;

For who does nothing with a better grace?

Young

NOT

11. Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.

Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?

1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.

Being we are at this time to speak of the proper notion of the church, therefore I shall not look upon it as comprehending any more than the sons of men.

Peajon

The notion of some beings which are not in nature, second notions as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being.

Dryden

Many actions are possible by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that not on, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind.

South

What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write.

Newton

There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and its laws, and yet few agree in their notions about these words.

Cheyne

That notion of hunger, cold, found, colour, thought, with, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the notion of hunger, cold, found, with, &c.

Watts

2. Sentiment; opinion.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,

And not molest us, unless we ourselves

Seek them with wandering thoughts and notions vain.

Milton

It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the man an opinion they have of their neighbours.

Addison

Sensualists they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come.

Atterbury

3. Sense; underbidding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakespeare, but not in use.

NOTIONAL, adj. [from notion.]

1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in ideas; visionary; fanciful.

The general and elaborate contemplations and notions, of the elements and their configurations, of the influences of heaven and earth, of the being but notional and of the future, and definite existence to be drawn out of our imaginations. Plato

Happened to be of that waking dream

When we call him, mounting, fugitive theme

Of man, prison-guest, ideal beauty.

Notional good, by every one's mind. Pope

We must be wary, lest we mistake any real fulfiling of performance, in the course of choice, for a merely notional and true thing; and the human mind, which properly nothing, as a conception of our own mind, or of a thing by our will, is upon the forced course of things, denoting only thus much, that all the bodies move and act according to their eternal properties, without any consideration or intention of doing. Boyle

2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.

The most notional dictators sit down in a contented opinion. Gloucester

NOTIONAL, n. f. [from notional.]

Empty, ungrounded opinion. Not in use.

I am at the advance of leisure, by disreputable and talkative notional. Gloucester

NOTIONALLY, adv. [from notional.]

In idea; mentally; in our conception, though not in reality.

The whole rational nature of man consists of two faculties, understanding and will, whether really, or notionally distinct. Notus

NOTORIETY, n. f. [from notus, Fr. from notus.]

Public knowledge; public exposure.

We read at a multitude of pages testimony may be produced for the remarkable passages, and indeed of several, that more than answer your expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature to be exposed to public not et. Addison

NOTORIOUS, adj. [from notus, Lat. notus, Fr.]

Publicly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence by those who do not know the true signification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a notorious crime, when public or ferret.

What need you make such a solemn exclaiming matter too notorious. Whitney

The goods of your intercepted packets

You want to the page a minute's sing, your goods are, Shakespeare

Since you provoke me, shall the most notorious Shakespeare

I shall have law in Epitaph. Shakespeare

To your notorious sin. Shakespeare

In the time of King Edward the first, the impediment of

of the conquest of Ireland are notorious. Darwin

This prebiterianism of war congratulates a ce in notorious sin, committed by a zealot of his own devotion. Whitney

We think not fit to condemn the most notorious malefactor before he hath had licence to propitiate

his plea. Whitney

What notorious vice is there that doth not blemish man's reputation? Whitney

The philosopher of Naples has been always very notorious for reading a life of his in a paper of his,

which makes partly out of the plenty of their country, and partly out of the temper of their climate. Whitney

The imprints have procured some small advancement of rears; although it be notorious that they do not receive the third penny of the real value. Whitney

NOTORIOUSLY, adv. [from notorious.]

Publicly; evidently; openly.

The exposing himself notoriously, did sometimes change the fortune of the day. Clarke

This is notoriously discoverable in some differences of brake or fern. Plowden

God tells us, that the eagle was notoriously known at Rome, though it be left to obscure to intemperance. Dryden

Should the earnings of a nation be more fixed in government, than in morals, learning, and complacency, which do notoriously vary in every age. Dryden

NOTORIOUSNESS, n. f. [from notorious.]

Public fame; notoriety.

To notorious, to hear. Inflection

NOTORIOUSLY, adv. [from not and notus.]

Of what there are two sorts, French, which is the most, and English, which is the least, and for and for it is not intended, being considered with a name. Clarke

NOTWITHSTANDING, conj. [This word

though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and standing, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante; it is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithstanding his loss; it is not to proper to say, he is rich notwithstanding

he has lost rich; yet this mode of writing is too frequent. Whitney has used it but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as, he is rich

notwithstanding that he has lost rich.

When notwithstanding is used absolutely,

the expression is elliptical, this or that being understood, as in the following pages of Hooker]

1. Without hindrance or obstruction from.

The crown which God hath bestowed on his church

we have subjected to their great and understanding his publication, from the way

does he had done for them. Darwin

2. Although. This use is not proper.

A person languishing under an ill-humour, body,

may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding

it will weaken him for a time, in order to put new ferment into the remaining mass, and draw into it fresh supplies. Whitney

3. Nevertheless; however.

They which honour the law as an image of the will of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Whitney

The knowledge is final, which we have on earth concerning things that we do in heaven, not- withstanding this much we know even of faith in heaven, that they pray. Whitney

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand

Open as day, for meeting charity

Yet notwithstanding, being merciful, he's flint;

As humorous as water. Shakespeare

NOCTIS, n. f. [Lat.] The fourth wind.

With olive to the north turns from the south,

North and After-Breeze, with thund'rous clouds

From Sierra Leone. Whitney

NOCTIVOX, n. f. [from nox, Lat. nox, Lat.]

The introduction of something new.

NOCTIVOR, n. f. [Lat.] The introducer of something new.

NOVEL, adj. [from novus, Lat. novus, Lat.]

1. New; not ancient; not used of old;

unusual.

The prebiterians are exactors of submission to their novel opinions, because they are stamped with the authority of laws. King Charles

It is no novel usurpation, but though void of other title, has the prescription of many ages. Whitney

Such is the constant strain of this ill-fated who every where brands the novel doctrine, as the new, novel, upstart heresy, folly and madness. Whitney

2. [In the civil law.] Appendant to the code, and of later enactment.

By the novel constitutions, burial may not be demented to any one. Ayliffe

NOVELLE, n. f. [from novelle, Fr.]

1. A small tale, generally of love.

Nothing of a foreign nature; like the trifling novels which Ariosto inserted in his poems. Dryden

For amongst the famous in barbarous pastime love,

The novelle's worth, and the drunkard's toast. Prior

2. A law annexed to the code.

By the civil law, no one was to be ordained a priest until he was thirty years of age, though by a later law it was sufficient, if he was above twenty. Ayliffe

NOVELTIES, n. f. [from novel.]

1. Innovations; alterations of novelty.

Novelties, which in reference to the philosophy of

Plato, are the novelties. Plato

The fathers of this world were not idolatrous, or novelties in the matter of the Sabbath. White

As novelties.

When a teacher comes to the world did teach,

Yet though a teacher, he is not a teacher. Denham

The teachers of the world did teach novelties have dif-ferenced in the world. Gloucester

N O W

To his proud pedant, or decim'd a noun. Dryden.

learn to feel the nourishment of their souls. Hecker.

the black palate.

Audijon.

The praise of doing well
Is to the ear, no ornament to the soul.
Now it tunc flies, perchance, however small,
Into the alabaster urn should fall,
The odours die. Prior.

The only motives that can be imagined of obedience to laws, are either the value and certainty of rewards, or an apprehension of justice and severity. Now neither of these, exclusive of the other, is the true principle of our obedience to God. Rogers.

A human body, forming in such a fluid in any imaginable posture, will never be reconcilable to this hydraulic law. There will be always something lighter beneath, and to a thing heavier above. Now what can make this heavier particles of bone stand above the lighter ones of the air, or depress these below those, against the tendency of nature. Bentley.

5. After this; since things are so; in familiar speech.

How shall any man distinguish between a parasite and a man of honour, who to hypocrisy and interest look for like duty and affection? Edwards.

6. Now and then; at one time and another uncertainly. This word means, with regard to time, what is meant by here and there, with respect to place.

Now and then they ground their lives on human authority, even when they most pre-empt divine. Hooker.

Now and then something of extraordinary, that is any thing of your production, is requisite to refresh your character. Dryden.

A most effectual argument against spontaneous generation is, that there is no now species produced, which would now and then happen, were there any such thing. Ray.

He who resolves to walk by the gospel rule of forbearing all revenge, will have opportunities every now and then to exercise his forgiving temper. Atter.

They now and then appear in the offices of religion, and avoid some scandalous enormities. Rogers.

7. Now and then are applied to places considered as they rise to notice in succession.

A mead here, there a heath, and now and then a wood. Dryden.

Now, n. f. Present moment. A poetical use.

Nothing is there to come, and nothing past,
But an eternal now does ever last. Cooley.

She vanish'd, we can scarcely say she dy'd,
For but a now did heav'n and earth divide:
This moment perfect health, the next was death. Dryden.

Not less ev'n in this despicable now,
Than when my name shall Africk with affrights. Dryden.

Nowadays, adv. [This word, though common and used by the best writers, is perhaps barbarous.] In the present age.

Not to great as it was wont of yore,
It's nowadays, he half to sit and fore. Spenser.

Reason and love keep little company together nowadays. Shakespeare.

It was a vestal and a virgin fire, and diuers as much from that which passes by this name nowadays, as the vital heat from the burning of a fever. South.

Such are those principles, which by reason of the cold cavils of perverse and unreasonable men, we are nowadays put to defend. Tillotson.

What men of spirit nowadays,
Come to give sober judgment of new plays. Garrick.

No'wed, adj. [noug, Fr.] Knotted; in-wreathed.

Reuben is conceived to bear three barres waved,
Judah a lion rampant, Dan a serpent nowed. Brown.

Nowes, n. f. [from nou, old Fr.] The marriage knot. Out of use.

Thou shalt look round about and see Thousands of crown'd souls throng to be Themselves thy crown, sons of thy nowes;
The virgin burns with which thy spouse
Made fruitful thy fair soul. Crashaw.

No'where, adv. [no and where.] Not in any place.

Some men, of whom we think very reverently, have in their books and writings, nowhere mentioned or taught that such things should be in the church. Hooker.

True pleasure and perfect freedom are nowhere to be found but in the practice of virtue. Tillotson.

No'wise, adv. [no and wise; this is commonly spoken and written by ignorant barbarians, noways.] Not in any manner or degree.

A power of natural gravitation, without contact or impulse, can in nowise be attributed to mere matter. Bentley.

NOXIOUS, adj. [noxious, Lat.]

1. Hurtful; harmful; baneful; mischievous; destructive; pernicious; unwholesome.

Preparation and correction is not only by addition of other bodies, but separation of noxious parts from their own. Brown.

Kill noxious creatures, where 'tis sin to save,
This only just prerogative we have. Dryden.

See pale Orion sheds unwelcome dews,
And, the pines a noxious shade diffuse;
Sharp Poceas blows, and nature feels decay,
Time conquers all, and we must time obey. Pope.

Noxious seeds of the disease are consumed in a smaller quantity in the blood. Blackmore.

2. Guilty; criminal.

Those who are noxious in the eye of the law, are justly punished by them to whom the execution of the law is committed. Brankall against Hobbes.

3. Unfavourable; unkindly.

Too frequent an appearance in places of much resort, is noxious to spiritual promotions. Swift.

No'xiously, adv. [from noxious.] Hurtfully; perniciously.

No'xiousness, n. f. [from noxious.] Hurtfulness; insalubrity.

The writers of politics have warned us of the noxiousness of this doctrine to all civil governments, which the christian religion is very far from disturbing. Hammond.

No'zle, n. f. [from nose.] The nose; the snout; the end.

It is nothing but a pauntry old scone, with the nose broke off. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To No'bble, v. a. [properly to knubble, or knubble, from knob, for a clenched fist.] To bruise with handy cuffs. Aspleyworth.

Nubiferous, adj. [nubifer, Lat.] Bringing clouds.

To Nubilate, v. a. [nubilo, Lat.] To cloud.

Nubile, adj. [nubile, Fr. nubilis, Lat.] Marriageable; fit for marriage.

The cowslip smiles, in brighter yellow dress,
Than that which veils the nubile virgin's breast. Prior.

Nuciferous, adj. [nucce and fero, Lat.] Nutbearing.

Nucleus, n. f. [Lat.] A kernel; any thing about which matter is gathered or conglobated.

The nuclei are each in all parts nearly of the same thickness, their figure suited to the nucleus, and the outer surface of the stone exactly of the same form with that of the nucleus. Woodward.

Nudation, n. f. [nudation, Fr. nudo, Lat.] The act of making bare or naked.

Nudity, n. f. [nudité, Fr. nudus, Latin.] Naked parts.

There are no such licences permitted in poetry, any more than in painting, to design and colour obscene nudities. Dryden.

No'll, See NEWEL.

No'acity, n. f. [nugac, Lat.] Futility; trifling talk or behaviour.

Nugation, n. f. [nugor, Lat.] The act or practice of trifling.

The opinion, that putrefaction is caused by cold, or peregrine and preternatural heats, is but nugation. Bacon.

Nugatory, adj. [nugatorius, Lat.] Trifling; futile; insignificant.

Some great men of the last age, before the mechanical philosophy was revived, were too much addicted to this nugatory art: when occult qualities, and sympathy and antipathy, were admitted for satisfactory explanations of things. Bentley.

Nuisance, n. f. [nuissance, Fr.]

1. Something noxious or offensive.

This is the hur's lot, he is accounted a pest and a nuisance; a person marked out for infamy and ruin. South.

A wife man who does not assist with his counsels, a rich man with his charity, and a poor man with his labour, are perfect nuisances in a commonwealth. Swift.

2. [In law.] Something that incommodes the neighbour.

Nuisances, as necessary to be swept away, as dirt out of the streets. Kittence.

To Null, v. a. [nullus, Lat.] To annul; to annihilate; to deprive of efficacy or existence.

Thy fair enchanted cup, and warbling charms,
No more on me have power, their force is null'd. Milton.

Reason hath the power of nulling or governing all other operations of bodies. Grew.

Null, adj. [nullus, Lat.] Void; of no force; ineffectual.

With what impatience must the mase behold
The wife, by her procuring husband sold?

For tho' the law makes null the adulterous deal,
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed Dryden.

Their orders are accounted to be null and invalid by many. Leffay.

The pope's confirmation of the church lands to those who held them by king Henry's donation, was null and fraudulent. Swift.

NULL, n. f. Something of no power, or no meaning. Marks in ciphered writing which stand for nothing, and are inserted only to puzzle, are called nulls.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

NULLIBETRY, n. f. [from nullibi, Latin.] The state of being nowhere.

To Nullify, v. a. [from nullus, Latin.] to annul; to make void.

Nullity, n. f. [nullité, Fr.]

1. Want of force or efficacy.

It can be no part of my business to overthrow this distinction, and to shew the nullity of it; which has been solidly done by most of our polemic writers. South.

The jurisdiction is opened by the party, in default of justice from the ordinary, as by appeals or nullities. Ayliffe.

2. Want of existence.

A hard body struck against another hard body, will yield an exterior sound, inasmuch as if the percussion be over soft, it may induce a nullity of sound; but never an interior sound. Bacon.

NUMB, adj. [benumen, benumbed, Sax.]

1. Torpid; deprived in a great measure of the power of motion and sensation; chill; motionless.

Like a stony statue, cold and numb. Shakespeare.
Laying long upon any part maketh it numb and asleep; for that the compression of the part suffereth not the spirits to have free access; and therefore when we come out of it, we feel a stinging or pricking, which is the re-entrance of the spirits. Bacon.

2. Producing chillness; benumbing.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lay me
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself
All thin and naked to the numb cold night. Shakespeare.

To NUMB, v. a. To make torpid; to make dull of motion or sensation; to deaden; to stupify.

Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Inforce their charity. Shakespeare.

She can unlock
The clasp'd chain, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton.

Plough naked, swain, and naked sow the land,
For lazy winter numbs the lab'ring hand. Dryden.

Nought shall avail
The pleasing song, or well repeated tale,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has embrac'd the ear. Prior.

NUMBEDNES, n. f. [from numbed.] Torpor; interruption of sensation.

If the nerve be quite divided, the pain is little,
Only a kind of stupor or numbedness. Wylliam.

To NUMBER, v. a. [from numbrer, Fr. numero, Latin.]

1. To count; to tell; to reckon how many.

If a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Genesis.
I will number you to the sword. Isaiah.
The gold, the veil, the tripods number'd o'er,
All these he found. Pope.

2. To reckon as one of the same kind.

He was numbered with the transgressors, and bare the sin of many. Isaiah.

NUMBER, n. f. [from nombre, Fr. numerus, Lat.]

1. The species of quantity by which it is computed how many.

Hye thee from this slaughter-house,
Left thou increase the number of the dead. Shaks.
The silver, the gold, and the vessels, were weigh'd by number and by weight. Ezra.

There is but one gate for strangers to enter at,
that it may be known what numbers of them are in the town. Addison.

2. Any particular aggregate of units, as even or odd.

This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers; they say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shaks.

3. Many; more than one.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

Water lily hath a root in the ground; and so have a number of other herbs that grow in ponds. Bacon.

Ladies are always of great use to the party they espouse, and never fail to win over numbers. Addison.

4. Multitude that may be counted.

Of him came nations and tribes out of number. 2 Esdras.

Loud as from numbers without number. Milton.

5. Comparative multitude.

Number itself importeth not much in armies,
where the people are of weak courage; for, as Virgil says, it never troubles a wolf how many the sheep be. Bacon.

6. Aggregated multitude.

If you will, some few of you shall see the place;
and then you may send for your sick, and the rest of your number, which ye will bring on land. Bacon.

Sir George Summers, sent thither with nine ships and five hundred men, lost a great part of their numbers in the ill of Bermudas. Heylin.

7. Harmony; proportions calculated by number.

They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, tow'rd his all-cheering leap, Milton.

8. Verses; poetry.

Then feed on thoughts that voluntary move,
Harmonious numbers, as the warbling bird Sings, sparkling. Milton.

Yet should the muses bid my numbers roll
Strong as their charms, and gentle as their soul. Pope.

9. In grammar.

In the noun is the variation or change of termination to signify a number more than one. When men first invented names, their application was to single things; but soon finding it necessary to speak of several things of the same kind together, they found it likewise necessary to vary or alter the noun. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

How many numbers is in nouns?—
—Two. Shakespeare.

NUMBERER, n. f. [from number.] He who numbers.

NUMBERLESS, adj. [from number.] Innumerable; more than can be reckoned.

I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences
'Guiltless me. Shakespeare.

About his chariot numberless were pour'd Cherub and seraph. Milton.

Deserts so great,
Though numberless, I never shall forget. Denham.

The soul converses with numberless beings of her own creation. Addison.

Travels he then a hundred leagues,
And suffers numberless fatigues. Swift.

NUMERES, n. f. [from numbles, Fr.] The entrails of a deer. Bailey.

NUMNESS, n. f. [from numb.] Torpor; interruption of action of sensation; dead-ness; stupefaction.

Stir, nay, come away;
Bequeath to death your numness; for from him
Dear life redeems you. Shakespeare.

Till length of years,
And sedentary numness, erase my limbs
To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton.

Cold numness's trait bereaves
Her corps of sense, and the air her soul receives. Denk.

Silence is worse than the fiercest and loudest accusements; since it may proceed from a kind of numness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain, or make a stir. South.

NUMERABLE, adj. [from numeralis, Latin.] Capable to be numbered.

NUMERAL, adj. [from numeral, Fr. from nume-rus, Lat.] Relating to number; consisting of number.

Some who cannot retain the several combinations of numbers in their distinct orders, and the dependence of a long a train of numeral progressions, are not able to follow their lifetime regularly to go over any moderate series of numbers. Locke.

NUMERALLY, adv. [from numeral.] According to number.

The blasts and gale winds thereof maintain no certainty in their course; nor are they numerally fear'd by navigators. Brown.

NUMEROUS, adj. [from numerosus, Lat.]

1. Containing many; consisting of many;
not few; many.

Queen Elizabeth was not so much obsequy for having a numerous, as a wife council. Bacon.

We reach our foes,
Who now appear so numerous and bold. Waller.

Many of our felix in the west, were never heard of by the numerous christian churches in the east of Asia. Telfey.

2. Harmonious; consisting of parts rightly numbered; melodious; musical.

Thy heart, no ruder than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my num'rous man Melt to compassion. Waller.

His verses are so numerous, so various, and so harmonious, that only Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him. Dryden.

NUMEROUSNESS, n. f. [from numerosus.]

1. The quality of being numerous.

2. Harmony; musicalness.

That which will distinguish his style is, the numerousness of his verse. There is nothing so delicately turned in all the Roman language. Dryden.

NUMMARY, adj. [from nummus, Latin.]

Relating to money.

The money drachma in process of time decreased;
but all the while the ponderal drachma continued
the same, just as our ponderal libra remains as it was, though the nummary hath much decreased. Arbutnot.

NUMMULAR, adj. [from nummularius, Latin.]

Relating to money.

NUMSKULL, n. f. [probably from numb, dull, torpid, insensible, and skull.]

1. A dullard; a dunce; a dolt; a block-head.

They have talked like numskulls. Arbutnot.

2. The head. In burlesque.

Or toes and fingers, in this case,
Of numskull's self should take the place. Prior.

NUMSKULLED, adj. [from numskull.]

Dull; stupid; doltish.

Jocus has fixed that eld pated, numskulled, nimnyhammer of yours from ruin, and all his family. Arbutnot.

NUM, n. f. A woman dedicated to the severer duties of religion; secluded in a cloister from the world, and debarred by a vow from the converse of men.

My daughters
Shall all be praying nuns, not weeping queens. Shaks.
A devout nun had vowed to be some young child, and bestow her whole life, and utmost industry to bring it up in strict piety. Hammond.

The most blooming toast in the island might have been a nun. Addison.

Ev'ry shepherd was undone, Swift.
To see her cloister'd like a nun.
NUN, n. f. [parus minor.] A kind of bird. Ainsworth.

NUNCHION. n. f. A piece of victuals eaten between meals.

NUNDINARY. } [nundina, Lat.] Relating to fairs. Dict.

NUNNERY. n. f. [from nun.] A house of nuns; of women under a vow of chastity, dedicated to the severer duties of religion.

I put your sister into a nunnery, with a strict command not to see you, for fear you should have wrought upon her to have taken the habit. Dryden.

NUPTIAL. adj. [nuptial, Fr. nuptialis, Lat.] Pertaining to marriage; used or done in marriage.

Confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant Bona to England's king. Shakespeare.

Because propagation of families proceedeth from the nuptial copulation, I desired to know of him what laws and customs they had concerning marriage. Bacon.

Then all in heat
They light the nuptial torch. Milton.
Whoever will undertake of God's secrets, must pare off whatsoever is unuseful, not at this sacrifice with a defiled head, nor come to this feast without a nuptial garment. Taylor.

First with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighbouring princes court her nuptial bed. Dry.
Let our eternal peace be seal'd by this,
With the first ardour of a nuptial kiss. Dryden.

NUPTIALS. n. f. Like the Latin without singular. [nuptie, Lat.]

1. Marriage.
This is the triumph of the nuptial day,
My better nuptials, which in spite of fate,
For ever join me to my dear Morat. Dryden.

It is in Shakespeare singular, but contrarily to use.

Lift up your countenances, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, which We two have sworn shall come. Winter's Tale.

NURSE. n. f. [nourrice, Fr.]

1. A woman that has the care of another's child.

Unnatural curiosity has taught all women, but the beggar, to find out nurses, which necessity only ought to commend. Raleigh.

2. A woman that has care of a sick person. Never mother had,

A page so kind, so dutiful, diligent, So fast, so nurse-like. Shakespeare.

One Mrs. Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook. Shakespeare.

3. One who breeds, educates, or protects.

Rome, the nurse of judgment,
Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One general tongue unto us. Shakespeare.

We must lose
The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. Shakespeare.

4. An old woman, in contempt,
Can tales more fencible, ludicrous, and vain,
By winter-fires old nurses entertain? Blackmore.

5. The state of being nursed.
Can wedlock know to great a cure,
As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleaveland.

6. In composition, any thing that supplies food.

Put into your breeding pond three melters for one spawner; but it into a nurse pond or feeding pond, then no care is to be taken. Walton.

To NURSE. v. a. [from the noun, or by contraction from nourish; nourrir, Fr.]

1. To bring up a child or any thing young. I was nursed in swaddling cloaths with cares. Widdow.

Him in Egerian groves Aricia bore,
And nurs'd his youth along the marshy shore. Dryd.

2. To bring up a child; not one's own. Shall I call a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child? Exodus.

3. To feed; to keep; to maintain. Thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Isaiah.

Our monarchs were acknowledged here,
That they their churches nursing fathers were. Denham.

The Niseans in their dark abode, Nurs'd secretly with milk the thriving god. Addison.

4. To tend the sick.
5. To pamper; to foment; to encourage; to soften; to cherish.

And what is strength, but an effect of youth, which it time nurse; how can it ever cease? Davies.

By what fate has vice to thrive amongst us, and by what hands been nurs'd up into so uncontroul'd a dominion? Locke.

NURSER. n. f. [from nurse.] 1. One that nurses. Not used.

See where he lies, inhered in the arms
Of the most bloody nurse of his harms. Shakespeare.

2. A promoter; a fomentor.
NURSERY. n. f. [from nurse.]

1. The act or office of nursing. I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Shakespeare.

2. That which is the object of a nurse's care. She went forth among her fruits and flowers,
To visit how they prosper'd, bud and bloom
Her nursery: they at her coming sprung,
And touch'd by her fair tendance gladder grew. Milton.

3. A plantation of young trees to be transplanted to other ground. Your nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground than the ground is whereunto you remove them. Bacon.

My paper is a kind of nursery for authors; and some who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names. Addison.

4. Place where young children are nursed and brought up.

I th' swaddling cloaths, the other from their nursery
Were stol'n. Shakespeare.

You see before you the spectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nursery to the sanctuary, from the sanctuary to the direful prison, from the prison to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderness; for so the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the shape in which he plies
At nill's elbow when she lies
Or stands before the nursery doors.
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have publick nurseries, where all parents are oblig'd to send their infants to be educated. Swift.

5. The place or state where any thing is fostered or brought up, from a nursery of children; or whence any thing is to be removed, from a nursery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itself a very idle life, and a fit nursery for a thief. Spenser.

To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakespeare.

A luxurious court is the nursery of diseases; it breeds them, it encourages, nourishes, and entertains them. L'Estrange.

A nursery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryd.

NURSING. n. f. [from nurse.] One nursed up; a fondling.

Then was the held in sovereign dignity,
And made the nursing of nobility. Spenser.

I was his nursing once, and choice delight,
His dearest in the womb. Milton.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare. Dryden.

NURTURE. n. f. [contracted from nouriture, French.]

1. Food; diet. For this did th' angel twice descend?
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and sacred. Milton.

2. Education; institution. Little used. She should take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not suffer them to come into bad hands. Spenser.

The thorny point
Of bare districts, hath taken from me the flow
Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture. Shakespeare.

To NURTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up. Thou broughtest it up with thy righteousness, and nurturedst it in thy law, and reformedst it with thy judgment. Esdras.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten. Wotton.

When an insolent despoiler of discipline, nurtured into impudence, shall appear before a church government, severity and resolution are that government's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity. They suppose mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offspring with a conscious tenderness. Bentley.

To NURGLE. v. a. To fondle; to cherish. Corrupted from nurgle. See NUZZLE.

AINSWORTH.

NUT. n. f. [noot, Sax. noot, Dutch; noix, French.]

1. The fruit of certain trees: it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the centre of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.

One chance'd to find a nut,
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had,
When quoth this Fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you free from peril. Dryden.

Nuts are hard of digestion, yet possess some good medicinal qualities.

2. A small body with teeth, which correspond with the teeth of wheels.

This faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat. Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.

NUTBROWN. adj. [nut and brown.] Brown like a nut kept long.

NUT

Young and old come forth to play,
Till the live-long daylight fail.
Then to the spicy nutbrown ale.
When this nutbrown sword was out,
With stomach-huge he laid about.
Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side,
For which the nutbrown lady, Erithacia,
Full often offer'd many a savoury kiss.
King Hardicnutte, 'midst Danes and Saxons stout,
Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on grout.
NUTCRACKERS. n. f. [nut and crack.]
An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.
He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addison.
NUTGALL. n. f. [nut and gall.] Hard excrecence of an oak.
In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak. Brown.
NUTHATCH. } n. f. [picus martius.] A NUTJOBBER. } bird. Ainsworth.
NUTPECKER. }
NUTHOOK. n. f. [nut and hook.]
1. A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.
2. It was anciently, I know not why, a name of contempt.
Nuthook, nuthook, you lie. Shakespeare.
NUTMEG. n. f. [nut and muguët, Fr.] The kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace, before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweetmeat, or as a curiosity.
There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromattick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. Hill.
The second integument, a dry and sterculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown.
I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandys.
NUTSHELL. n. f. [nut and shell.]
1. The hard substance that encloses the kernel of the nut.

NUT

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a King of infinite space.
It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.
2. It is used proverbially for any thing of little value.
A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell I had never got off again. L'Estrange.
NUTTREE. n. f. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts: commonly a hazel.
Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak.
Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.
NUTRICATION. n. f. [nutricatio, Latin.]
Manner of feeding or being fed.
Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrition. Brown.
NUTRIMENT. n. f. [nutrimentum, Lat.]
That which feeds or nourishes; food;
aliment.
This slave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shak.
The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.
Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift.
NUTRIMENTAL. adj. [from nutriment.]
Having the qualities of food; alimental.
By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arbuthnot.
NUTRITION. n. f. [from nutritio, nutritio,
Lat. nutrition, Fr.]
1. The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or increasing growth.
2. New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decaying; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Glanville.
The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in the glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbuthnot.
2. That which nourishes; nutriment. Less properly.
Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NYS

NUTRITIOUS. adj. [from nutritio, nutritio.]
Having the quality of nourishing.
O may it thus give food
Thy furrows white, and by the woolly rime Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within. Philos.
The heat close to incubation is only nutritious;
and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbuthnot.
NUTRITIVE. adj. [from nutritio, Latin.] Nourishing; nutrimental; alimental.
While the secretory, or separating glands, are too much widened and extended, they furnish a great quantity of nutritive juice to pass through. Blackm.
NUTRITURE. n. f. [from nutritio, Latin.]
The power of nourishing. Not used.
Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutritive. Harvey.
TO NUTZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nurgle; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nqr, and in that sense used it.]
1. To nurse; to foster.
Old men long nursed in corruption, scorn them that would seek reformation. Sidney.
2. To go with the nose down like a hog.
He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nursing like an eel in the mud. Arbuthnot.
Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arbuth.
The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.
NYMPH. n. f. [nympha; nymphæ, Lat.]
1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.
And as the moisture which the thirsty earth
sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the grassy plains. Davies.
2. A lady. In poetry.
This resolve no mortal dares,
None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.
NYMPHISH. adj. [from nymph.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.
Tending all to nymphish war. Drayton.
NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is;
not is. Obsolete.
Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,
And buidest strong mark upon a weak ground.
Spenser.

O.

O

O Has in English a long sound; as, drone, groan, stone, alone, cloke, broke,
coal, drall; or short, got, not, shot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a fervile a subjoined; as, moan; or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone:
when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, scoll, and even then sometimes short; as, toll.
2. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation.

O A F

O that we, who have refused all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger!
Decay of Plety.
O! were he present, that his eyes and hands might see, and urge, the death which he commands.
Dryden.
2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakespeare for a circle or oval.
Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France! or may we cram Within this wooden O, the very earth
That did affright the air at Agincourt. Shakespeare.
OAF. n. f. [This word is variously written; auff, ofe, and oph; it seems a corruption of orphe, a demon or fairy; in German aff, from which elf; and means properly the same with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent orphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]

O A F

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies.
There, when a child happens to be got,
Which after proves an idiot,
When folk perceive it thrive not,
2 B 2

OAK

The fault therein to another :
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half,
Says that the fairy left this oak,
And took away the other. Drayton.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.
OAK-FISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull;
doltish.

OAK-FISHNESS. n. f. [from oafish.] Stupidity; doltish.

OAK. n. f. [ac, æc, Sax. which, says Skinner, to show how easy it is to play the fool, under a show of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from oak, a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Juvénal in his thoughts, who on this very word has thrown his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave critick, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode duci potest, from oak, strength; by taking the three first letters, and then linking the o, as is not uncommon; quecus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small tender thyrses. The embryos, which are produced in remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard leathery cups: the leaves are linear. The species are five. Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shakespeare.

He lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakespeare.

No tree beareth so many ballard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without fall. Bacon.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees:
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.

An oak growing from a plant to a great tree,
and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.

A light earthy, hoary, and sparry matter, incruled and adixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Fossils.

Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber and the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

OAK Evergreen. n. f. [illex.]

The fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable charcoal in the world. Miller.

OAKAPPLE. n. f. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrecence on the oak.

Another kind of excrecence is an exundation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon.

OAKEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak.

No nation doth equal England for oaken timber where with to build ships. Bacon.

By lot from Jove's bow the poor
Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaks garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompence of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Addison.

OAT

He snatch'd a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it. Arbutnot.

OAKKEMPIN. n. f. An apple.

Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Westbury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.

OAKUM. n. f. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopp'd.

They make their oakum, wherewith they caulk the seams of the ships, of old beer and weather-beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown to rotte as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which muddlers and washes away with every tea as the ships labour and are tossed. Raleigh.

Some drive old oakum thro' each seam and rift;
Their left hand does the caulking-noug guide;
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR. n. f. [ape, Sax. perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with ear, to plow; aro, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pulling on the vessel.

It's oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. Shakespeare.

So tow'ds a ship the oar-finn'd galleys ply,
Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to fall reveng'd. Denham.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untought Indian, on the stream did glide,
E'er sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate. Wilkins.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.
He more undaunt'd on the ruin rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing.
His bold head

'Rove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd Himself with his good arms in lully strokes
To th' shore. Shakespeare.

OARV. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly row's
Her state with oary feet. Milton.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
In skinny filus, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

OAST. n. f. A kiln. Not in use.
Empty the bun into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OATCAKE. n. f. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron, Peucham.

OATEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughing clocks. Shakspeare.

OATH. n. f. [oith, Gutluck; oð, Saxon.] The distance between the noun oath, and the verb swear, is very observable, as it may show that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages. [An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over John's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou shouldst read thy faith
In a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Defended into perjury to love me. Shakespeare.

OBD

All the oath-rites said,
I then ascended her adorned bed. Chapman.

We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not; and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it; but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OATHABLE. adj. [from oath.] A word not used. Capable of having an oath administered.

You're not oathable.
Altho' I know you'll swear

Into strong shoulders th' immortal gods. Shakespeare.

OATHBREAKING. n. f. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.

His oathbreaking he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworn. Shakspeare.

OATMALT. n. f. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats.

In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barley malt. Mortimer.

OATMEAL. n. f. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats.

Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scab on the head. Arbutnot.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of adies, leather, oatmeal, bean, and chalk. Gay.

OATMEAL. n. f. [panicum.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OATS. n. f. [uten, Sax.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people.

It is of the grass leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horses. Shakespeare.

It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oatbrake by the insinuation of the particles of moisture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer.

His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OATTHISTLE. n. f. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Ainsworth.

To OBDUCE. v. a. [obduco, Lat.] To draw over as a covering.

No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cuts. Hale.

OBDUCTION. n. f. [from obductio, obduco, Lat.] The act of covering, or laying a cover.

OBDU'RACY. n. f. [from obdurate.] Inflexible wickedness; impenitence; hardness of heart.

Thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistency. Shakespeare.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obduracy. South.

OBDRURATE. adj. [obduratus, Latin.]

1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obstinate in ill; hardened; impenitent.

O! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when will he might have slain thee;

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakespeare.

If when you make your pray'r,
God should be to obdurate as yourselves,
How would it fare with your departed souls? Shakespeare.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou art, obdurate, stout, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.

To convince the proud what sign avail,

Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim.
Milton.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at least
My dying prayers, and grant my last request.
Dryden.

1. Hardened; firm; stubborn: always with some degree of evil.

Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatever instructive to the contrary.
Hooder.

A pleasing sorcery could charm
Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite Falls, tious hope, or arm th' obdurate breast
With stubborn patience, as with triple steel.
Milton.

No such thought ever sinks his marble obdurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from
it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough-paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all letters of pity and compassion.
South.

3. Harsh; rugged.

They joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel.
Suyt.

Stubbornness; inflexibility; impenitence.

OBURATION, n. f. [from obdurate.]

Hardness of heart; stubbornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obduration in evil, that through a froward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended?
Hooder.

This barren season is always the reward of obstinate obduration.
Hammond.

OBUR'ED, adj. [obduratus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impenitent.

This law his hapless foes, but flood obdur'd,
And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'rs Intense.
Milton.

OBDI'ENCE, n. f. [obedience, Fr. obediencia, Lat.] Obediousness; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obediencia.
Shaksp.

Thy husband
Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obediencia.
Shaksp.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obediencia unto righteousness.
Romans.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obediencia to a commission, for men to furiously assailed, to hold their hands.
Bacon.

In vain thou bid'st me to forbear,
Obediencia were rebellion here.
Cowley.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou did'st want,
Obediencia to the law of God, impos'd
On penalty of death.
Milton.

We must beg the grace and assistance of God's spirit to enable us to forsake our sins, and to walk in obediencia to him.
Duty of Man.

The obediencia of men is to imitate the obediencia of angels, and rational beings on earth, are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him.
Law.

OBDI'ENT, adj. [obediens, Latin.] Submissive to authority; complaint with command or prohibition; obsequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obediens in all things.
2 Corinthians.

To this her mother's plot
She, seemingly obediens, likewise hath Made promise.
Shakspere.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obediens to government, and peaceable one towards another.
Tillotson.

The chief his orders gives; th' obediens band
With due observance, wait the chief's command.
Pope.

OBDI'ENTIAL, adj. [obediens, Fr. from obediens.] According to the rule of obedience.

Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obedient submission to the command.
Hammond.

Faith is then perfect when it produces in us a fiducial assent to whatever the gospel has revealed, and an obedient submission to the commands.
Woke's Preparation for Death.

OBDI'ENTLY, adv. [from obediens.] With obedience.

We should behave ourselves reverently and obediently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men.
Tillotson.

OBE'ISANCE, n. f. [obsequence, French.] This word is formed by corruption from obsequentia, an act of reverence.] A bow; a courtesy; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee.

Partholowen my page,

See dress'd in all suits like a lady;

Then call him madam, do him all obsequence.
Shaksp.

Bathsheba bowed and did obsequence unto the king.
1 Kings.

The lords and ladies paid
Their homage, with a low obsequence made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade.
Dryden.

OBE'ISANCE, n. f. [obsequens, Latin.]

1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid.
Harris.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,

And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.
Pope.

2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].

He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what redundant.
Grew.

OBEQUITATION, n. f. [from obsequio,
Lat.] The act of riding about.

OBERRATION, n. f. [from oberrare, Latin.]
The act of wandering about.

with flesh.

OBE'USNESS, } n. f. [from obese.] Morbid OBE'USITY, } fatness; incumbrance of flesh.

On these many diseases depend; as on the straitness of the chest, a phthisis; on the largeness of the veins, an aneurysm; on their fineness, obesity.
Cruce.

To ONE v. t. a. [obey, Fr. obedire, Lat.]

1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.

The will of Heaven

Be done in this and all things! I obey.
Shakspere.

I am adum'd, that women are so simple

To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,

When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Shaksp.

Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof.
Romans.

The ancient Britons yet a scepter'd king obeyed.
Dryden.

Was the thy God, that her thou didst obey.

Before his voice?
Milton.

Africk and India shall his pow'r obey,

He shall extend his propagated sway,

Beyond the solar year, without the hurry way.
Dry.

2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Audison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obey au roi.

He commanded the trumpets to sound; to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courses, breaking their lances.

Sidney.

The bit bark, obeying to her mind,

Forth launched quickly, as she did desire.
Spencer.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Romans.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pain not feel,
Yet to their general's voice they took obey.
Milton.

OBJECT, n. f. [objet, Fr. objet, Lat.]

1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.

Pardon

The first uncivil spirit, that hath dar'd
On this unworthy scold to bring forth
So great an object.
Shakspere.

They are her farthest reaching instruments,

Yet they no beams unto their objects send;

But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end.
Davies.

The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God: God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed.
Hammond.

The act of faith is applied to the object according to the nature of it; to what is already past, ad past; to what is to come, as still to come; to that which is present, as it is still present.
Perkins.

Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praise.
Spruit.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will.
Dryden.

As you have no mistress to serve, so let your own soul be the object of your daily care and attendance.

2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind.

Dishonour not your eye

By throwing it on any other object.
Shakspere.

Why did this double object in our sight,

Of sight pursu'd in the air, and o'er the ground?
Milton.

This passenger felt some degree of concern, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew.
Atterbury.

3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by somewhat else.

The accusative after a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called by grammarians, the object of the verb.
Clarke.

OBJECT-GLASS, n. f. Glass of an optical instrument remotest from the eye.

An object-glass of a telescope I once mented, by guiding it on pitch with putty, and leaning easily on it in the guiding, lest the putty should scratch it.
Newton.

To OBJECT, v. a. [objecter, Fr. objec-tionem, Lat.]

1. To oppose; to present in opposition.

Flowers growing scattered in divers beds, will show more to that they be object to view at once.
Bacon.

Pallas to their eyes

The mist objected, and condemn'd the skies.
Pope.

2. To propose as a charge criminal, or a reason adverse; with to or against.

Were it not some kind of blameworthiness to be like unto infidels and heathens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries.
Hooder.

The book requireth due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against such as are to be ordered.
Whitgift.

Men in all deliberations find one to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretell difficulties when propositions are objected, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed,
it requireth new work; which false point of wisdom is the base of business.
Bacon.

The old truth was, object ingratitude, and ye object all crimes; and is it not an old truth, is it not a higher truth, object rebellion, and ye object all crimes.
Whitgift.

This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all.
Spruit.

It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like.
Dryden.

Others obscure the purity of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies.

Addison's State of the War.

There was but this single fault that Erasmus, though an enemy, could object to him. Atterbury.
OBJECTION. n. f. [objection, Fr. objection, Lat.]

1. The act of presenting any thing in opposition.

2. Criminal charge.

Speak on, sir, I dare your worst objections. Shakspeare

3. Adverse argument.

There is objection between all estates a secret war. I know well this speech is the objection and not the decision; and that it is after related. Bacon.

Whoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet.

4. Fault found.

I have shown your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Walsh's Letter.

OBJECTIVE. adj. [objectif, Fr. objectus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Watts.

2. Made an object; proposed as an object; residing in objects.

If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasures of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBJECTIVELY. adv. [from objective.]

1. In manner of an object.

This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when, such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be readily the sign of that same object of the mind. Locke.

2. In the state of an object.

The baseness should be destroyed, in regard he first receiveth the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission, which objectively move his sense. Brown.

OBJECTIVENESS. n. f. [from objective.]

The state of being an object.

Is there such a motion of objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of sight is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectiveness fitted to that faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBJECTOR. n. f. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.

But these objectors must the cause upbraid, That has not mortal man immortal made. Blackmore.

Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley.

OBITU. [a corruption of obit, or obit.]
Funeral obsequies. Ainsworth.

To OBJURGATE. v. a. [objurgo, Latin.]

To chide; to reprove.

OBJURGATION. n. f. [objurgatio, Latin.]

Reproof; reprehension.

If there be no true liberty, but all things come to pass by inevitable necessity, then what are all interrogations and objurgations, and reprehensions and expostulations? Bramhall.

OBJURGATORY. adj. [objurgatorius, Lat.]

Reprehenitory; culpatory; chiding.

OBULATE. adj. [obolatus, Lat.] Flatted at the poles. Used of a spheroid.

By gravitation bodies on this globe will press towards its centre, though not exactly thither, by reason of the oblate spheroidal figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

OBLATION. n. f. [oblation, Fr. oblatus, Lat.] An offering; a sacrifice; any thing offered as an act of worship or reverence.

She looked upon the picture before her, and straight sigh'd, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of duty ought to be honoured with such oblations. Sidney.

Many conceive in the oblation of Jephtha's daughter, not a natural but a civil kind of death, and a separation from the world. Brown.

The will gives worth to the oblation, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest giver upon the same level with the richest. South.

The kind oblation of a falling tear. Dryden.

Behold the coward, and the brave.

All make oblations at this shrine. Swift.

OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, Latin.]

Delight; pleasure.

To OBLIGATE. v. a. [obligo, Lat.] To bind by contract or duty.

OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from obligo, Lat. obligation, Fr.]

1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty; contract.

Your father lost a father; That father his; and the survivor bound In filial obligation, for some term, To do obsequious sorrow. Shakspeare.

There was no means for him as a Christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon.

Nothing can be more reasonable than that such creatures should be under the obligation of accepting such evidence, as in itself is sufficient for their conviction. Wilkins.

The better to satisfy this obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryden.

No ties can bind; that from constraint arise, Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies. Græc.

2. An act which binds any man to some performance.

The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burden. Taylor.

3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.

Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself? L'Estrange.

So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South.

OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatoire, Fr. from obligate.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive; with to or on.

And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to Christian princes and states. Bacon.

As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Taylor.

A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.

If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void. Swift.

To OBLIGE. v. a. [obliger, Fr. oblige, Lat.]

1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.

All these have moved me, and some of them obliged me to commend these my labours to your grace's perusal. White.

The church hath been thought fit to be called catholic, in reference to the universal obedience which it preferibeth; but as regard to the persons, obliging men of all conditions, and in relation to the precepts, requiring the performance of all the evangelical commands. Paterson.

Religion obliges men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.

The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers.

2. To indebted; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, must Oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Waller.

Since love oblige not, I from this hour

Assume the right of man's despotic power. Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,

To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!

These truths are not the product of thy mind,

But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:

Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,

And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.

Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar,

And would not be obliged to God for more. Dryden.

When interest calls off all her sneaking train,

When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,

She waits wot to the scaffold or the cell. Pope.

To those hills we are obliged for all our metals, and to them for all the conveniences and comforts of life. Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferior, than by disdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South.

Some natures are so froward and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.

Happy the people who preferre their honour, By the same duties that oblige their prince!

Addison.

OBLIGE. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal and written contract.

OBLIGEMENT. n. f. [obligement, French.]

Obligation.

I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligement, that you lay upon me. Milton.

Let this fair prince's but one minute stay

A look from her will your obligements pay. Dryden.

OBLIGER. n. f. He who binds by contract.

OBLIGING. part. adj. [obligeant, Fr. from oblige.] Civil; complaisant; respectful; engaging.

Nothing could be more obliging and respectful than the lion's letter was in appearance; but there was death in the true intent. L'Estrange.

Monseigneur Strozzi has many courtesies, and is very obliging to a stranger who desires the fight of them. Addison.

Obliging creatures! make me see All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me. Pope.

So obliging that he ne'er oblig'd. Pope.

OBLIGINGLY. adv. [from obliging.] Civilly; complaisantly.

Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper. Addison.

I see her taste each nauseous draught, And so obligingly am caught;

I bless the hand from whence they came, Nor dare distort my face for shame. Swift.

OBLIGINGNESS. n. f. [from obliging.]

1. Obligation; force.

They look into them not to weigh the obligingness, but to quarrel the difficulty of the injunctions: not to direct practice, but excuse provocations. Decoy of Piety.

2. Civility; complaisance.

OBLIQUATION. n. f. [obliquatio, from obliquus, Lat.] Declination from straightness or perpendicularity; obliquity.

The change made by the obliquation of the eyes is least in colours of the densest than in this substance. Newton.

OBLIQUE. adj. [oblique, French; obliquus, Latin.]

1. Not direct; not perpendicular; not parallel.

One by his view
Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies.

If found be stopped and repercussed, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon.

May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heav'n of an oblique sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn.

Bacchus's flag must be accus'd which shone,
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the Gallic sun.

It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion.

Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgment of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it cast in such and such a position.

2. Not direct; indirect; by a side glance.

Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him.

3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.

OBLIQUELY. adv. [from oblique.]

1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.

Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January.

Declining from the noon of day.

The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray.

2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.

They haply might admit the truths obliquely levelled, which banefulness persuadeth not to enquire for.

His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself.

OBLIQUENESS. n. f. [from oblique, Fr. from OBLIQUITY.]

1. Deviation from physical rectitude; deviation from parallelism or perpendicularity.

Which else to several spheres thou wilt ascribe,
Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities.

2. Deviation from moral rectitude.

There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity.

Count Rhodophil, cut out from government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scale of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities.

For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity.

To OBLITERATE. v. a. [from oblitero, ob and littera, Latin.]

1. To efface any thing written.

2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.

Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments.

Let men consider themselves as in that unhappy contract, which has rendered them part of the devil's possession, and conceive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls.

These simple ideas the understanding can no more have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images which the objects set before it produce.

OBLITERATION. n. f. [from obliteratio, Latin.]

Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transmutations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all the monuments of antiquity that ages precedent to some time have yielded.

OBLIVION. n. f. [from oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;

But 'tis our king's perfection to forget.

2. Amnely; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [from oblivio, Lat.] Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom.

The British souls

Fault to see the crowding ghosts descend
Unnumber'd; well aveng'd, they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink th' oblivious lake.

Oh born to see what none can see awake!

Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake.

OBLONG. adj. [from oblongus, Lat.]

Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a descent.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle.

OBLONGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong form.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidal.

OBLONGNESS. n. f. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.

O'BLIQUE. n. f. [from obliquor, Latin.]

1. Cenforious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deversally subject unto that bitter oath of obloquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which he hates, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions, so we peradventure might be upbraid'd, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,

Are laid on old defects.

Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn.

The just decree of God, pronounc'd and sworn?

Shall names, that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction?

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true gemmes, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy 'th' world
In me to lose.

OBLIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from oblivio, Lat.] Loss of speech.

A vehement fear of it produceth obmutescence.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [from oblivio, Lat.]

1. Subject.

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws.

2. Liable to punishment.

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,

I like, I am, I suffer, does before you stand,

Watching your sceptre.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and bountifulness; and that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cur'd death, to expiate our offences.

Thy name, O Venus, if the kindred powers

Preserve our plains, and floud the Mantuan towns,

Obnoxious by Cremona's neighbouring crine,

The wings of swans, and stronger plume'd things

Shall taste aloft.

3. Reprehensible; not of sound reputation.

Conceiving it most reasonable to search for primitive truth in the primitive writers, and not to suffer his understanding to be preposited by the captivated and interested schemes of modern, and without obnoxious authors.

4. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts.

But what will not ambition and revenge

Descend to? who aspires, must down as low

As high he soar'd; obnoxious first or last,

To base things.

Beasts lie down,

To dew obnoxious on the grassy floor.

They leave the government a trunk ask'd, defenceless, and obnoxious to every storm.

OBLIVIOUSLY. adv. [from oblivio.]

In a state of subjection; in the state of one liable to punishment.

OBLIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from oblivio.]

Subjection; liability to punishment.

To proclaim a contrary law for the dissolution of the former.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [from oblivio, Fr. obscure, Latin.]

1. Immodest; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing lewd ideas.

Chemus th' oblique dread of Mithras's sons.

Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire.

Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,

And of the light obscene to lately view'd.

3. Impudic; ill-omened.

Cate should thy walk, as at the cheerful light

The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight.

It is the sun's fate like you's, to be displeasing to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre.

OBLIVIOUSLY. adv. [from oblivio.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

OBLIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from oblivio, French, obscenity.]

Impurity of thought or language; unchastity; lewdness.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in wit.

Those fables were tempered with th' Italian severity, and free from any note of insensibility or obscenity.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber da king thence by break of day,
To walk th' obsequies of night away. Dryden.
No pious vice obsequy should find,
Thou art an art confpire to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURATION, n. f. [obscuratio, Lat.]
1. The act of darkening.

2. A state of being darkened.
As to the sun and moon, their obscuratio or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Burnet.

OBSCURE, adj. [obscur, Fr. obscurus, Lat.]

1. Dark; unlightened; gloomy; hindering light.

Whose cupbath his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscur darkness. Francis.
Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd mine abyss,
And thro' the palpable obscur find out
His uncouth way? Milton.

2. Living in the dark.
The obscur bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shakspeare.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.

I explain some of the most obscur passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryden.

4. Not noted; not observable.
He says, that he is an obscur person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

TO OBSCURE, v. a. [obscurare, Lat.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

'They are all couched in a pit hard by Heron's oak, with obscur'd light; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakspeare.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds wail'd, and the furies roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscur the pole. Pope.

2. To make less visible.

What must I hold a candle to my flames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakspeare.

Thinking by this retirement to obscur himself from God, he infringed the omniscience and effectual ubiquity of his Maker. Brown.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private consent it hath been used in dangerous times to obscur writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Holder.

There is scarce any duty which has been so obscur'd by the writings of learned men, as this. Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think't thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,
And feel'st not in obscur'd thy godlike frame?
I know thee now by thy ungrateful pride,
That shows me what thy faded looks did hide. Dryden.

5. To conceal; to make unknown.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To sun or starlight, spread their umbrage broad. Milton.

OBSCURELY, adv. [from obscur.]

1. Not brightly; not luminously; darkly.

2. Out of sight; privately; without notice;
not conspicuously.

Such was the rite of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscur'd bred,
From thence did loose to open streets aspire. Dryd.

Content thyself to be obscur'd good. Addison.

3. Not clearly; not plainly; darkly to the mind.

The woman's food at first obscur'd told,
Now ampler known, thy Saviour and thy Lord. Milton.

OBSCURENESS, n. f. [obscuritas, Latin;
obscurité, French.]

1. Darknesh; want of light.

Lo! adieu of darkness and obscurité, tribulation and anguish upon the earth. Esther.
Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,
It would not form one thought dark as mine are:
I could lend them obscurité now, and say,
Out of myself there should be no more day. Donne.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for obscurité design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryden.

3. Darknesh of meaning.

Not to mention that obscurité that attends prophecy, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscur. Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred Scripture had difficulties in it, many causes of obscurité did readily occur to me. Locke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurité, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity. Locke.

OBSCURATION, n. f. [obscuratio, from ob-scuro, Lat.] Entreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obscuratio. Stillingfleet.

OBSEQUES, n. f. [obseques, Fr.] I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequia, Lat. this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorlaus valiantly requiring his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.

Fair Juliet, that with angels doth remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living honour'd thee, and being dead,
With funeral obsequies adorn thy tomb. Shakspeare.

I spare the widows tears, their woeful cries,
And howling at their husbands obsequies;
How Thebes at these funerals did afflict,
And with what gifts the mourning flames dismiss. Dryden.

His body shall be royally interred,
I will, myself,
Be the chief mourner at his obsequies. Dryden.

Alas! poor Poll, my Indian talker, dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies. Creech.

2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.

Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy. Crashaw.

Him I'll solemnly attend,
With silent obsequy and funeral train,
Home to his father's house. Milton.

OBSEQUIOUS, adj. [from obsequium,
Latin.]

1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.

Adore not the rising son, that you forget the father, who raised you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him. Bacon.

At his command th' uprooted hills retir'd
Each to his place; they lost his voice, and went Obsequious. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I follow'd her; what was her honour knew,
And, with obsequious majesty, approv'd
My pleaded reason. Milton's Paradise Lost.

See how the obsequious wind and liquid air
The Theban hero does upward bear. Cowley.

A genial cherishing heat acts upon the it and obsequious matter as to organize and fashion it according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

His servants weeping,
Obsequious to his orders, bear him thither. Addison.
The vote of an assembly, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been conceived in a private brain, afterwards supported by an obsequious party. Swift.

2. In Shakspeare, it seems to signify, funeral; such as the rites of funerals require.

Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term, . . .
To do obsequious sorrow. Hamlet.

OBSEQUIOUSLY, adv. [from obsequious.]

1. Obediently; with compliance.

They rise, and with respectful awe,
At the word giv'n, obsequiously withdraw. Dryden.

We cannot reasonably expect that any one should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion, and embrace ours with a blind resignation. Locke.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies, with funeral rites; with reverence for the dead.

I a while obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster. Rich. III.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS, n. f. [from obsequious.]

1. Obedience; compliance.

They apply themselves both to his interest and honour, with all the arts of flattery and obsequious-ness, the surest and the readiest way to advance a man. South.

OBSEVRABLE, adj. [from obseruo, Lat.]

Remarkable eminent; such as may deserve notice.

They do bury their dead with obsevrable ceremonies. Abbot.

Their proprieties affixed unto bodies from considerations deduced from east, west, or those obsevr-able points of the sphere, will not be justified from such foundations. Brown.

I took a just account of every obsevrable circumstance of the earth, stone, metal, or other matter, from the surface quite down to the bottom of the pit, and entered it carefully into a journal. Woodw.

The great and more obsevrable occasions of exercising our courage, occur but seldom. Rogers.

OBSEVRABLY, adv. [from obsevrable.] In a manner worthy of note.

It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear sky,
as is obsevrably recorded in some histories. Brown.

OBSEVRANCE, n. f. [obsevrance, Fr. ob-servo, Latin.]

1. Respect; ceremonial reverence.

In the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do obsevrance on the morn of May. Shakspeare.

Arcite left his bed, resolv'd to pay Obsevrance to the month of merry May. Dryden.

2. Religious rite.

Some represent to themselves the whole of religion as consisting in a few easy obsevrances, and never lay the least restraint on the business or diversions of this life. Rogers.

3. Attentive practice.

Use all th' obsevrance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad offence
To please his grandam. Shakspeare.

Love rigid honesty
And strict obsevrance of impartial laws. Rowcommon.

If the divine laws were proposed to our obsevr-ance, with no other motive than the advantages attending it, they would be little more than an article. Rogers's Sermons.

4. Rule of practice.

There are other strict obsevrances;
As, not to see a woman. Shakspeare.

5. Careful obedience.

We must attend our Creator in all th' ordinances which he has prescribed to the obsevrance of his church. Rogers.

6. Observation; attention.

There can be no observation or experience of greater certainty, as to the increase of mankind, than the strict and vigilant obsevrance of the calculations and registers of the bills of births and deaths. Hail's Origin of Mankind.

7. Obedient regard; reverential attention.

Having had such experience of his ability and obsevrance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him. Watson.

OBSEVRANT, adj. [obsevrans, Latin.]

1. Attentive; diligent; watchful.

obtain the thing we desire. Hooker.

By his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. Hebrews.

If they could not be obtained of the proud tyrant, then to conclude peace with him upon any conditions. Kuolles.

Some pray for riches, riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers for their wealth are soon. Dry.

The conclusion of the story I forbore, because I could not obtain from myself to show Absalom unfortunate. Dryden.

Whatever once is denied them, they are certainly not to obtain by crying. Locke.

TO OBTAIN. v. n.

1. To continue in use.
The Theodosian Code, several hundred years after Justinian's time, had obtained in the western parts of Europe. Baker.

2. To be established; to subsist in nature or practice.

Our impious use no longer shall obtain.
Brothers no more, by brothers shall be slain. Dryd.

The situation of the sun and earth, which the theorist supposes, is so far from being preferable to this which at present obtains, that this hath infinitely the advantage of it. Woodward.

Where waiting the public treasure has obtained in a court, all good order is banished. Duganant.

The general laws of fluidity, elasticity, and gravity, obtain in animal and inanimate bodies. Chyane.

3. To prevail; to succeed. Not in use.

There is due from the judge to the advocate,
some commendation where causes are fair pleaded;
especially towards the side which obtaineth not. Bacon.

OBTAINABLE. adj. [from obtain.]

1. To be procured.
Spirits which come over in distillations, miscible with water, and wholly combustible, are obtainable from plants by previous fermentation. Arbuthnot.

2. To be gained.
What thinks he of his redemption, and the rate it cost, not being obtainable unless his only son would come down from heaven, and be made man, and pay down his own life for it. Kittellwell.

OBTAINER. n. f. [from obtain.] He who obtains.

TO OBTEMPERATE. v. a. [obtemperare, Fr. obtempero, Lat.] To obey. Dich.

TO OBTEND. v. a. [obtendo, Latin.]

1. To oppose; to hold out in opposition.

2. To pretend; to offer as the reason of any thing.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
Obtending heav'n for what'er ill befall. Dryden.

OBTENEBRATION. n. f. [from obtenebrere, Latin.] Darkness; the state of being darkened; the act of darkening; cloudiness.

In every integrit or vertigo, there is an obtenebration joined with a scumblance of turning round.

OBTESSION. n. f. [from obteendere.] The act of obteending.

TO OBTESS. v. a. [obteendere, Lat.] To besech; to supplicate.

Suppliants demand
A truce, with olive branches in their hand;
Obte his clemency, and from the plain Beg leave to draw the bodies of their slain. Dryden.

OBTESSATION. n. f. [from obteendere, Lat. from obteendere.] Supplication; entreaty.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [obtrusio, Latin.]
Slander; detraction; calumny.

TO OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrudo, Lat.] To thrust into any place or state by force or imposture; to offer with unreasonable importunity.

It is their torment, that the thing they shun doth follow them, truth, as it were, even obtruding itself into their knowledge, and not permitting them to be so ignorant as they would be. Hooker.

There may be as great a vanity in retiring and withdrawing men's conceits from the world, as in obtruding them. Bacon.

Some things are easily granted; the rest ought not to be obtruded upon me with the point of the sword. King Charles.

Who can abide, that against their own doctors six books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be, under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.

Why should thou then obtrude this diligence upon me, where no acceptance it can find? Milton.

Whatever was not by them thought necessary, must not by us be obtruded on, or forced into that catalogue. Hammond.

A cause of common error is the credulity of men;
that is, an easy assent to what is obtruded, or believing at first ear what is delivered by others. Brown.

The objects of our senses obtrude their particular ideas upon our minds, whether we will or no; and the operations of our minds will not let us be without some obscure notions of them. Locke.

Whether thy great forefathers came
From realms that bear Vesputio's name;
For so conjectures would obtrude,
And from thy painted skin conclude. Swift.

OBTRUDER. n. f. [from obtrude.] One that obtrudes.

Do justice to the inventors or publishers of the true experiments, as well as upon the obtruders of false ones. Boyle.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Lat.]

The act of obtruding.

No man can think it other than the method of slavery, by savage rudeness and importunate obtrusiveness of violence, to have the mist of his errors and passion dispelled. King Charles.

OBTRUSIVE. adj. [from obtrude.] Inclined to force one's self, or any thing else, upon others.

Not obvious, not obtrusive, but retir'd
The more desirable. Milton.

TO OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrudo, Latin.] To blunt; to dull; to quell; to deaden.

Avicen countermands letting blood in choleric bodies, because he esteems the blood a bridle of gall, obtruding its acrimony and fierceness. Harvey.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Lat.]

The act of stopping up any thing with something finereared over it.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus and angle.] Having angles larger than right angles.

2. The state of being dulled.

Obtrusion of the senses, internal and external.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Lat.] Something happening not constantly and regularly, but uncertainty; incidental advantage.

When the country grows more rich and better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions, will also be more augmented and better valued. Spenser.

TO OBEVERT. v. a. [obverso, Latin.] To turn toward.

The laborant with an iron rod stirred and kindled part of the nitre, that the fire might be more diffused, and more parts might be obverted to the air. Boyle.

A man can from no place behold, but there will be amongst innumerable superfluities, that look some one way, and some another, enough of them obverted to his eye to afford a confused idea of light. Bayle on Colours.

An erect cone placed in an horizontal plane, at a great distance from the eye, we judge to be nothing but a flat circle, if it be obverted towards us. Watts' Logic.

TO OBIATE. v. a. [obvius, Latin; obvier, Fr.] To meet in the way; to prevent by interception.

To lay down every thing in its full light, so as to obviate all exceptions, and remove every difficulty, would carry me out too far. Woodwards.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [oblivus, Latin.]

1. Meeting any thing; opposed in front to any thing.

I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton.

2. Open; exposed.

Whether such room in nature unpossess
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpe of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them, is obvious to dispute. Milton.

3. Easily discovered; plain; evident; easily found: Swift has used it harshly for easily intelligible.

Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye contain'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quenched? Milton.

Enterland with solitude,
Where obvious duty ere while appear'd unsought. Milton.

They are such lights as are only obvious to every man of sense, who loves poetry and undervalues it. Deacon.

I am apt to think many words difficult or obscure, which are obvious to scholars. Swift.

These sentiments, whether they be expressed on the foul, or arise as obvious reflections of our reason, I call natural, because they have been found in all ages. Rogers.

All the great lines of our duty are clear and obvious, the extent of it understood, the obligation acknowledged, and the wisdom of complying with it freely confessed. Rogers.

O'BVIOUSLY. adv. [from obvious.]

1. Evidently; apparently.
All purely identical propositions obviously and at first blush contain no instruction. Locke.

2. Easily to be found.

For France, Spain, and other foreign countries, the names of their laws and lawyers have obviously particulars concerning place and precedence of their magistrates and dignities. Selden.

3. Naturally.

We may then more obviously, yet truly, liken the civil state to bulwarks, and the church to a cypress. Hobbes.

OBLIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obvious.] State of being evident or apparent.

Slight experiments are more easily and cheaply tried; I thought their causes or obviousness better to recommend than depreciate them. Boyle.

TO OBLUMBRATE. v. a. [oblumbrō, Lat.] To shade; to cloud.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Vulture, dispelled all those clouds which had hang over and obumbrate him. Howell.

OBUMBRATION. n. f. [from obumbrō, Lat.]

The act of darkening or clouding.

OCCASION. n. f. [occasio, Fr. occasio, Latin.]

1. Occurrence; casualty; incident.

The laws of Christ we find rather mentioned by occasion in the writings of the apostles, than any solemn thing directly written to comprehend them in legal form. Hooker.

2. Opportunity; convenience.

Me unwearied, and unaware of such mishap,
She brought to mischief through occasion,
Where this same wicked villain did me light upon. Spenser.

Because of the money returned in our sacks are we brought in, that he may seek occasion, fall upon us, and take us for bondmen. Genesis.

Use not liberty for an occasion. Galatians.

Let me not let pass

Occasion which now smiles. Milton.

I'll take th' occasion which he gives to bring

Him to his death. Waller.

With a mind as great as theirs he came

To find at home occasion for his fame,

Where dark confusions did the nations hide. Wall.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their fault, and to sleep again. South.

This one has occasion of observing more than once in several fragments of antiquity, that are still to be seen in Rome. Addison.

3. Accidental cause.

Have you ever heard what was the occasion and first beginning of this custom? Spenser.

That woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool. Shakespeare.

The fair for whom they strove,

Nor thought, when she beheld the sight from far,

Her beauty was th' occasion of the war. Dryden.

Concerning ideas lodged in the memory, and upon occasion revived by the mind, it takes notice of them as of a former impression. Locke.

4. Reason not cogent, but opportune.

Your business calls on you,

And you embrace th' occasion to depart. Shaksp.

5. Incidental need; casual exigence.

Never master had

A page so kind, so dutious, diligent,

So tender over his occasion. Shakespeare.

Antony will use his affection where it is:

He m' tried but his occasion here. Shakespeare.

My occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money. Shakespeare.

They who are desirous of a name in painting,

should read with diligence, and make their observations of such things as they find for their purpose, and of which they may have occasion. Dugden.

Syllogism made use of on occasion to discover a fallacy had in a rhetorical flourish. Locke.

The ancient canons were very well fitted for the occasion of the church in its purer ages. Baker.

God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occasion of each other's assistance. Swift.

A prudent chief not always must display

His powers in equal tanks, and fair array,

But with th' occasion and the place comply,

Conceal his force, may, seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

TO OCCASION. v. a. [occassio, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cause casually.

Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occasioned from the body, must needs be less natural to a spirit. Locke.

The good Platonist condemns the foolish thoughts, which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occasioned in him. Atterbury.

2. To cause; to produce.

I doubt not, whether the great increase of that disease may not have been occasioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables. Temple.

A consumption may be occasioned by running fores, or occasional fistulas, whose secret cures and winding barrows empty themselves by copious discharges. Blackmore.

By its stypic quality it affects the nerves, very often occasioning tremors. Arbuthnot.

3. To influence.

If we enquire what it is that occasions men to make several combinations of simple ideas into distinct modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language. Locke.

OCCASIONAL. adj. [occasional, Fr. from occasion.]

1. Incidental; casual.

Thus much is sufficient out of Scripture, to verify our explication of the Deluge, according to the Mofical history of the flood, according to many occasional reflections dispersed in other pieces of Scripture concerning it. Barnet.

2. Producing by accident.

The ground or occasional original herod, was the amangement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Produced by occasion or incidental exigence.

Felices these constant tunes, there are likewise occasional tunes for the performance of this duty. Dodd.

Those letters were not writ to all;

Nor first intended but occasional,

Their absent runons. Dryden's Hind and Penth.

OCCASIONALLY. adv. [from occasional.]

According to incidental exigence; incidentally.

Authority and reason for her wait,

As one intended first, not after made

Occasionally. Milton.

I have endeavoured to interweave with the assertions tone of the proofs wherein they depend, and occasionally scatter several of the more important observations throughout the work. Woodward.

OCCASIONER. n. f. [from occasion.] One that causes, or promotes by design or accident.

She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way herm respect of her brother's loss, whom she regarded all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occasioners. Sidney.

Some men will load me as if I were a wilful and resolved occasioner of my own and my subjects miseries. King Charles.

Let a man dig a pit and leave it open, when by it a happy man has his neighbour's head to fall therein and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occasioner of that loss to his neighbour. Sunderlin.

OCCULTATION. n. f. [occultatio, from oc-curo, Latin.] The act of blinding or making blind.

Those places speak of obduration and occultation,

so as if the blindness is that is in the minds, and hardness that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God. Sunderlin.

OCCIDENT. n. f. [from occidens, Latin.]

The west.

The envious clouds are bent

To dim his glory, and to stain the tract

Of his bright passage to the occident. Shakespeare.

OCCIDENTAL. adj. [occidentalis, Latin.]

Western.

He twice in morn and occidental damp,

Moist Hesperus hath quenched his sleepy lamp. Shakespeare.

If he had not been drained, the night have filled her palaces with occidental cold and liver. Howell.

East and west have been the obvious occasions of philosophers, magnifying the condition of India

above the setting and occident climates. Brown.

OCCIPUTAL. adj. [occipitalis, Lat.] Placed in the hinder part of the head.

OCCIPUT. n. f. [Lat.] The hinder part of the head.

His broad-brim'd hat
Hinges o'er his caput most quaintly,
To make the knave appear more family. Butler.
OCCUPATION. n. f. [from occipio, Lat.] The act of killing.

To OCCU'DE. v. a. [occludo, Latin.] To shut up.

They take it up, and roll it upon the cartils, Secretly occluding the pores they confer the natural humidity, and so prevent corruption. Brown.

OCCUL'SE. adj. [occlusus, Lat.] Shut up; closed.

The apulic is either primary and occlus, so as to preclude all passages of breath or cover through the mouth, or else partial and previous, so as to give them some passages out of the mouth. Holder.

OCCULTATION. n. f. [from occlusio, Latin.]
The act of shutting up.

OCCULT. adj. [occultus, Fr. occultus, Lat.] Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscoverable.

If his occult guile
Do not itself uncancel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Hamlet.
An infant will play a lesson on an instrument without finding a frow, and our tongues will conduct in a tune not making a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere; which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the least of our intellects. Glenville.

These intimus we call occult qualities, which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work. L'Estrange.

These are manifest qualities, and their causes only occult. And the Aristotelians give the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects. Newton's Opticks.

OCCULTATION. n. f. [occultatio, Lat.] In astronomy, is the time that a star or planet is hid from our sight, when eclipsed by interposition of the body of the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCCULTNESS. n. f. [from occult.] Secret-ness; state of being hid.

OCCUPANCY. n. f. [from occupans, Lat.]
The act of taking possession.

Of moveables, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement.

Warburton on Literary Property.

OCCUPANT. n. f. [occupans, Latin.] He that takes possession of any thing.

Of birds and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant, but of civil people not so. Bacon.

To OCCUPATE. v. a. [occupo, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.

Drunk men are taken with a plain disposition in voluntary motions for that the spirit of the wine oppresses the spirits animal, and occupate part of the place where they are, and to make them weak to move. Bacon.

OCCUPATION. n. f. [from occupation, Fr.
occupation, Lat.]

1. The act of taking possession.

Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last six score years much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches and unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.

Such were the figures of the then infant world;
so negligent their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to count any thing to want. Howe's word.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then send up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Baker.

3. Trade, calling; vocation.

The rod of patience strike all crudes in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakespeare.

He was of the famo craft with them, and wrought, for by their occupation they were tent-makers. Acts.

OCCUPIER. n. f. [from occupy.]

1. A possessor; one who takes into his possession.

If the title of occupiers be good in a land unpeopled, why should it be had accounted in a country peopled thinly? Raleigh.

2. One who follows any employment.

Thy merchant lie and the occupiers of thy merchandise shall fall into the midst of the seas. Eccl. i. c.

To OCCUPY. v. a. [occupier, Fr. occupo, Lat.]

1. To possess; to keep; to take up.

How shall he that occupies the room of the un-learned say: Even at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? 1 Cor. xiii.

Powder being suddenly fired altogether, upon this high elevation, requireth a greater space than before it is occupied. Bacon.

He must assert infinite generations before that first deluge; and then the earth could not receive them, but the infinite bodies of men must occupy an infinite space. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To busy; to employ.

An archbishop may have cause to occupy more chaplains than five. Ann of Henry VIII.
They occupied themselves about the sabbath, yielding exceeding praise to the Lord. 2 Mac. vi.

How can he get wisdom that driveth oven and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bul-locks? Ecclesiasticus.

He that giveth his mind to the law of the Most High, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancient, and be occupied in prophecies. Ecclesiasticus.

3. To follow as business.

They occupy their business in deep waters.
Common Prayer.

Mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise. Ecclesi.

4. To use; to expand.

and nine talents. Exodus.

To OCCUPY. v. n. To follow business.

He called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and laid unto them, Occupy till I come. Luke.

To OCCUR. v. n. [occurro, Lat.]

1. To be presented to the memory or attention.

There doth not occur to me any use of this experiment for profit. Bacon.

The mind should be always ready to turn itself to the variety of objects that occur, and allow them as much consideration as shall be thought fit. Locke.

The far greater part of the examples that occur to us, are to many encouragements to vice and disobedience. Rogers.

2. To appear here and there.

In Scripture though the word occur, yet there is no such thing as in our author's sense. Locke.

3. To clash; to strike against; to meet.

Bodies have a determinate motion according to the degrees of their external impulse, their inward principle of gravitation, and the resistance of the bodies they occur with. Newton.

4. To obviate; to intercept; to make opposition to. A latinism.

Before I begin that, I must occur to one specious objection against this proposition. Locke.

OCCURRENCE. n. f. [occurrence, French;
from occur: this was perhaps originally occurrents.]

1. Incident; accidental event.

In education most time is to be bestowed on that which is of the greatest consequence in the ordinary course and occurrences of that life the young man is destined for. Locke.

2. Occasional presentation.

Voyages detain the mind by the perpetual occurrence and expectation of something new. White.

OCCURRENT. n. f. [occurrent, Fr. occurrens, Latin.] Incident; any thing that happens.

Contentions were as yet neverable to prevent two evils, the one a mutual exchange of unseemly and unjust disgraces, the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work upon all occurrences, with most advantage in private. Hooker.

He did himself certify all the news and occurrences in every particular, from Calice, to the mayor and aldermen of London. Bacon.

OCCURSION. n. f. [occursum, Lat.] Clash; mutual blow.

In the resolution of bodies by fire, some of the deliquated parts may, by their various occursum occasioned by the heat, stick closely. Boyle.

Now should those active particles, ever and anon jostled by the occursum of other bodies, so orderly keep their cells without alteration of fire. Glamm.

OCCAN. n. f. [occan, Fr. oceanus, Lat.]

1. The main; the great sea.

The golden sun fulfils the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac. Shakespeare.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? Shakespeare.

2. Any immense expanse.

Time, in general, is to duration, as place to expansion. They are so much of those boundless oceans of eternity and immensity, as is set out and distinguished from the rest, to denote the position of finite real beings, to those uniform, infinite oceans of duration and space. Locke.

OCCAN. adj. [This is not usual, though conformable to the original import of the word.] Pertaining to the main or great sea.

In bulk as huge as that sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works Created hugest that swim the ocean stream. Milton.

Bounds were set
To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave. Milton.

OCCANICK. adj. [from occan.] Pertaining to the ocean.

OCCELLATED. adj. [ocellatus, Lat.] Resembling the eye.

The white butterfly lays its offspring on cabbage leaves, a very beautiful reddish occellated one. Derham.

OCHRE. n. f. [ochre, ocre, Fr. ochra.]

The earths distinguished by the name of ochres are those which have rough or naturally dusky surfaces, are but slightly coherent in their texture, and are composed of fine and soft argillaceous particles, and are readily diffusible in water. They are of various colours; such as red, yellow, blue, green, black. The yellow sort are called ochres of iron, and the blue ochres of copper. Hill.

OCHREOUS. adj. [from ochre.] Consisting

He is a odd sort of thing, both the odd frame of fable,
 Such a doped lenity of thing on things.
 As ever I heard of madmen. Shakespeare.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white,

I make up my delight,

No odd becoming graces.

Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces.

Suckling.

When I brake loose from writers who have employed them, and parts in propagating of vice.

I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;

He made his life long scholars stand;

Their mouth still cover'd with their hand;

Else, may be, some odd talking youth,

Might have refus'd to let his ears

Attend the mutick of the trichies. Prior.

The odd colour being made by nothing else than by reflection of a specular superficies, seems to odd a phenomenon, and is difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deerved to be taken notice of. Newton.

So proud I am to have,

So impudent I own myself no knave.

So odd, my country's ruin makes me grieve. Pope.

To counterpoise this hero of the mole,

Some for reason are irregular and odd.

What other men dislike is sure to please

Of all mankind these dear antipodes. Young.

somewhat oddy upon it. Collier.

The dreams of sleeping men are made up of waking men's ideas, though for the most part

This child was near being excluded out of the species of man barely by his shape. It is certain a figure a little more oddy turned had cast him, and he had been executed. Locke.

The real essence of substances we know not; and therefore are founded in our nominal essences, which we make ourselves, that if several men were to be asked concerning some oddy-shaped letus, whether it were a man or no? one should meet with different answers. Locke.

Her awkward love indeed was oddy fated;

She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As in doors in the clare oblique,

With various light your eyes allure;

A flaming yellow have the spread;

Draw off in blue, or change in red;

Yet from these colours oddy mix'd,

Your sight upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black fulfaint lying on the ground very oddy shaped. Swift.

Follies are very oddy and elegantly shaped,

according to the modish notion of their constituent parts,

or the cavities they are tumbled in. Beaulty.

I chancy who enjoy

So far the happier lot, enjoying thee

Permeant by in much more. Milton.

Shall I give him a partake

Full happiness is mine, or rather not;

But keep the ods of knowledge in my power

Without ceasing. Milton.

Cicero's speech of outburst and of fate,

Remember this, and ask the church and state.

Walker.

All these, thus unequally furnished with truth, and adorned in knowledge, I suppose of equal useful parts, all the ods between them have the different hope that has been given to their un-oddy nature. Locke.

Judging a balancing account, and determining on which side the ods lie. Locke.

2. More than an even wager; more likely than the contrary.

Some every man's nature is very prone to think the best of himself, and of his own condition; it is oddy, but he will find a third oddy temptation. South.

The prophetic part of the oddy was one day to introduce a debate about repeating the text clause,

when there appeared at least four to one ods

against them. Swift.

Some list of fellows upon whom some inconfu-

table odds were when the ods there are already encountered with a numerous oddy. Swift.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would oggle on the outside of his eye upwards, and the white upward. Abraham.

OFFLO, n. f. [from olla, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotch-potch.

These general motives of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great ogles, they rather make a stew than provoke appetite. Swickard.

Whence is there such an oglo, or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service, without any temple as to the diversity of their sects and opinions? King Charles.

He that keeps an open house, should consider that there are ogles of guests, as well as of dishes, and that the liberty of a common table is as good as a tacit invitation to all sorts of intruders. 17th flange.

OGRESSES. n. f. [in heraldry.] Cannon balls of a black colour.

OH, interject. An exclamation denoting pain, sorrow, or surprise.

Take a full accom'd horse, a charming one,
Cry'd, oh! and mount it. Shakespeare.
Oh me! what the horse have got over the river, what shall we do? Warton.

My eyes confess it,
But oh, the medleys or my high attempt Speaks louder yet! Dryden.

OIL. n. f. [oavel, Saxon; oleum, Latin.]

1. The juice of olives expressed.
Bring pure oil olive beaten for the light. Proverbs.

2. Any, fat, greasy, unctuous, thin matter.
In most bugs there is only one gland; in which are divers cells, ending in two or three larger cells lying under the middle of the oil bag. Dehman.

3. The juices of vegetables, whether expressed or drawn by the still, that will not mix with water.

Oil with chemists called sulphur, is the second of their hypostatical, and of the true five chemical principles. It is an inflammable, unctuous, subtle substance, which usually rises after the spirit. The chemists attribute to this principle all diversity of colours. There are two sorts of oil; one, which will swim upon water, as oil of sweet and lavender, which the chemists call essential; and another kind, which probably is mixt with salts, and will sink in water, as the oil of guaiacum and cloves. Harris.

OKE

After this expressed oil, we made trial of a distilled one; and for that purpose made choice of the common oil of ripe oil. Bogle

A curious artist long mur'd to toils
Of gentle toil, with combs, and fragrant oils,
Whether by chance, or by some god inspir'd,
So touch'd his curls, his mighty soul was fir'd. Young or lubricate with oil.

The men tell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain idle. Hutton

Amber will attract flints thus oiled, it will convert the needles of dials, made either of brass or iron, although they be much oiled: for in those needles coming live upon their centre there can be no adhesion. Brown's Fugio Erroris
Swift oils many a spring which Harley moves.

OIL-COLOUR, n. f. [oil and colour.] Colour made by grinding coloured substances in oil.

Oil-colours, after they are brought to their due temper, may be preserved long in some degree of freshest, kept all the while under water. Bogle

OILINESS, n. f. [from oil.] Undefiniteness; greasiness; quality approaching to that of oil.

Pale hath lot and succulent leaves; which oiliness, if drawn forth by the sun, will make a very great change. Bacon

Wine is inflammable, for as it hath a kind of oiliness. Bacon

Smoke from unctuous bodies and such whole oiliness is evident, he nameth inferior. Brown

Chyle has the same principles as milk, viscosity from the calcareous parts, an oiliness from the butyreous parts, and an acidity from the tartareous.

The flesh of animals which live upon other animals, is most unctuous; though offensive to the stomach sometimes by reason of their odours. A. Bath.

where oils and pickles are sold.

OILY, adj. [from oil.]

1. Consisting of oil; containing oil; having the qualities of oil.

The cloud, if it were oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because it preyeth upon water and flame, and fare upon oil. Bacon's Natural History

Watry substances are more apt to putrify than oily. Bacon

Flame is grosser than gross fire, by reason of the mixture with it of that viscous oily matter, which, being drawn out of the wood and canals, serves for fuel. Dryden

2. Fatty; greasy.

This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's;
Go call him forth. Shakespeare

OILYGRAIN, n. f. A plant. Miller

OILY PALM, n. f. A tree.

It grows as high as the mainmast of a ship. The inhabitants make an oil from the pulp of the fruit, and draw a wine from the body of the trees, which incrusts; and with the rind of these trees they make mats to be on. Miller

TO OINT, v. a. [oint, Fr.] To anoint; to smear with something unctuous.

They oint their naked limbs with mother's oil,
Or from the fountains where living sulphur boils,
They mix a medicine to foment their limbs. Dryden

Minerva was not wanting to the war,
Directing pointed arrows from atas;
And death with poison arm'd. Dryden

OINTMENT, n. f. [from oint.] Unguent;
unctuous matter to smear any thing.

A life and long health that gracious ointment gave,
And deadly wounds could heal, and rear again.
The sentience's corpse appointed for the grave. Spenser

OKE, n. f. [See OCHRE.] A colour.

And Klaus taking for his younglings care,
Lest greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Duly with oke did their shoulders mark. Sidney

Ye shall eat of the old floure. Leicester
The vine beareth more grapes when it is young;
but grapes that make better wine when it is old;
for that the juice is better concocted. Bacon

5. Ancient; not modern.

The Genoese are cunning, industrious, and inured to hardi-ship, which was the character of the old Latrans. Adams

6. Of any specified duration.

How old art thou? Not to young, for to have a woman for singing, not to old to doat on her for any thing. I have years on my face forty eight.

Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you not.
In Ephebus I am but two hours old.
As strange unto your town as to your talk. Shakespeare

He did unfold

Within an ox-hide, head at nine years old,
All the ancient blazes, that were of former kinds.

Any son that shall live to see thirty persons descended of his body alive together, and all above three years old, makes this feat, which is done at the cost of the state. Bacon

These things they cancel, as having been effu-sated in re, and of occasion peculiar to the times of old, and as being now superfluous. Thackeray
Whether such virtue spent of old now fail'd
More angels to create. Milton's Paradise Lost

A land there is, Hesperia nam'd of old,

The soil is fruitful, and the men are bold,

Now call'd Italia, from the leader's name. Dryden

In days of old there liv'd of mighty name,
A valiant prince, and Thebes was his name. Dryden

OLDFASHIONED, adj. [old and fashion.]

Formed according to obsolete custom.

Some are offended that I turned their tales into modern English, because they look on Chaucer as a dry, old-fashioned wit, not worth reviving. Dryden

He is one of those old-fashioned men of wit and pleasure, that shows his parts by rallery on manner. Addison

proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish, whereof this humour may be a gross excretion and odorous separation. Brown

The first salt would have been not unlike that of men's urine; of which old and detestable liquor
I chose to make an instance, because chemists are not wont to take care for extracting the first salt of it. Boyle

OLIVASTORY, n. f. [olivastoria, Lat.] A form of government which places the supreme power in a small number; aristocracy.

The word kind of oligarchy is, when men are govern'd indeed by a few, and yet are not taught to know what those few be, whom they should obey. Locke

We have no aristocracy but in contemplation, all oligarchies, wherein a few men dominate, do what they list. Burton

After the expedition into Sicily, the Athenians chose four hundred men for administration of affairs, who became a body of tyrants, and were call'd a oligarchy, or tyranny of the few, under which hateful denomination they were soon after depos'd. Swift

3. In continuance; without ceasing.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn. Craffwe.

Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd. Dryd.

You roam about, and never are at rest;
By new desires, that is, new torments full possess'd:
As in a feverish dream you still drink on,
And wonder why your thirst is never gone. Dryden.

The peasants defy the sun, they work on in the hottest part of the day without intermission. Locke.

4. Not off; as, he is neither on nor off;
that is, he is irresolute.

5. Upon the body, as part of dress. His clothes were neither on nor off; they were disordered. See OFF.

A long cloak he had on. Sidney.

Stiff in brocade, and pinch'd in stays,
Her patches, paints, and jewels on;
All day let envy view her face,
And Phillis is but twenty-one. Prior.

A painted vest prince Voltager had on,
Which from a naked Pict his grandfire won. Blackmore.

6. It notes resolution to advance forward;
not backward.

Since 'tis decreed, and to this period lead
A thousand ways, the noblest path we'll tread;

And bravely on, till they or we, or all,
A common sacrifice to honour fall. Denham.

7. It is through almost all its significations opposed to off, and means approach, junction, addition, or preference.

ON. interj. A word of incitement or encouragement to attack; elliptically for to go on.

Therefore on, or stir your sword stark naked;
for me 'tisle you must. Shakespeare.

Cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,
By this one bloody trial of their war. Shakespeare.

On then, my wife! and tools and knives expose,
And, since thou canst not make a friend, make foes. Young.

ON. adv. [from one.]

1. One time.

Trees that bear mast, are fruitful but over in two years; the cause is, the expence of sap. In con.

For though from out the ark a raven flies,
And water him to force no longer; Milton.

A dove, sent forth once and again to spy
Green trees or even ad. Milton.

Once every moon he watch'd, and once at night. Cauley.

You came out like some great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your diversion, though you had no need to extend your territories. Dryden.

2. A single time.

Whom this heaven, he does not once tell us. Locke.

3. The same time.

At once with him they rose.
Their rising all at once was as the sound
Of thunder heard remote. Milton.

4. At a point of time indivisible.

Night came on, not by degrees prepar'd,
But all at once, at once the wondrous air,
The thunders roll. Dryden.

Now that the fixed stars, by reason of their immense distance appear like points, and so far as their light is dilated by refraction, may appear from hence, that when the sun passes over them and eclipses them, their light vanishes, not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton.

5. One time, though no more.

Fortis, those ill deeds that fully fame,
In blood once tainted, like a current run
From the lewd father to the lewd son. Dryden.

6. At the time immediate.

This hath all its force at once upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state. Atterbury.

7. Formerly; at a former time.

Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
Tlatter our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.

My soul had once some foolish fondnets for thee.
But hence 'tis gone. Addison.

8. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as,
this once, that once.

ON. adj. [an, æne, Saxon; een, Dutch;
em, German; n, Greek.]

1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unit.

The man he knew was one that willingly
For one good look would hazard all. Daniel.

Pyndarus the poet, and one of the wisest, ac-knowledge'd also one God the most high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh.

Love him by parts in all your num'rous race,
And from those parts form one collected grace;
Then when you have refin'd to that degree,
Imagine all in one, and think that one is he. Dryd.

2. Indefinitely, any; some one.

ONE

We shall Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days.
I took pains to make them speak, taught them each hour.
One of these or other.

It is added by any.
When any one hears the word of the Kingdom, and he will not do it, then I say to him, he will be one of these.
If any one makes a felony in this life, and is not forgiven, he will be one of these.

It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features false, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these graceful.
Suppose the common depth of the face, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile.
It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay out thoughts before others with advantage and clearness.

My legs were clothed together by so many wraps as over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy.
There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other.

Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell.
At one time they keep their patients to warm, at another to stiffen them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue.

One of two: apposed to the other.
Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other,
whether there hath been any such thing as this.
Both the matter of the bone and marshallite, had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marshallite, first growing hard, the other as being of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure.

Not many; the same.
The church is therefore one, though the members may be many; because they all agree in one faith.
There is one Lord and one faith, and that truth once delivered to the saints, which whosoever shall receive, embrace, and profess, must necessarily be accounted one in reference to that profession: for it a company of believers become a church by believing, they must also become one church by believing one truth.

Particularly one.
One day when Phoebe fair,
With all her band was following the chase,
This nymph quite tir'd with heat of scorching air,
Sat down to rest.
One day, in turning some uncultured ground,
In hopes a free-stone quarry might be found,
His mattock met resistance, and behold,
A casket bur'd with diamonds sull'd, and gold.

Some future.
Heav'n waveth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye.

ONE, n. f. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps be considered as concurrent with the nature of an adjective, the substantive being understood.

1. A single person.
If one by one we wedded all the world.
She who kill'd would be unparalleled.
Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be fought and earnestly thirsted for.

From his lofty steed he flew,
And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each.
If one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my lord, within whose faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best.
When you'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Descend to view the mutes' humble seat.

2. A single mass or aggregate.
It is one thing only as a heap is one.
3. The last hour.
Till the one o'clock, our dance of custom
Let us not forget.
4. The same thing.
I answer'd not again.
But that's all one.
To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one, as to say any thing is, and is not in the understanding.

5. A person, indefinitely and loose.
A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in running human affairs.

6. A person, by way of eminence.
My father, king of Spain, was reckoned one.
The wisest prince that there had reign'd.

7. A distinct or particular person.
That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another.
No nations are wholly alien and strangers the one to the other.
The obedience of the one to the call of grace, when the other, supposed to have sufficient, if not an equal measure, obeys not, may reasonably be imputed to the humble, malleable, melting temper.

One or other fees a little box which was carried away with her, and to discovers her to her friends.

8. Persons united.
As I have made ye one, lords one remain:
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.

9. Concord; agreement; one mind.
The king was well instructed how to carry himself between Ferdinand and Philip, resolving to keep them at one within themselves.
He is not at one with himself what account to give of it.

10. [On l'on, French. It is used sometimes as a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they live obscurely, men know not how; or die ob-scurely, men mark not when.
For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when;
or, it is not known how.] Any person;
any man indefinitely.
It is not to worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Aeneas, as by one's own choice and working.
One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither sets forth what Froma is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death.
One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages.
For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first.
For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroes's comment.

11. A person of particular character.
Then what you speak
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not e. fly jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme.
With lives and fortunes trusting one
Who to discreetly us'd his own.
Edward I. was one who very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it.
One who condemn'd divine and human laws.

ONE

Forgive me, if that title I afford
To one, whom Nature meant to be a lord.
12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun.
This relative mode of speech, whether singular, or plural, is in my ear, not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.
Be not found there, hence with your little one.

Does the son receive a natural life? The father enjoys a civil one—that's but the matter, that's the term.
These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such vain ones as are displayed in human blood.
He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false error being infinite.
The following plain rules and directions, are the best useful because they are plain ones.
There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones.
Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad reign, who might possibly have been a good had he been invested with an authority limited
law.
This evil fortune which attends extra-ordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs that when a great genius appears, the dunces are all in conspiracy against him.

13. One another, is a mode of speech very frequent; as, they love one another; that is, one of them loves another; the flocks beats the trees against one another; that is, one against another.
In democratical governments, war did commonly unite the minds of men; when they had enemies abroad, they did not contend with one another at home.

ONE berry. n. f. [aconitum, Latin.] Wolf-bane.
ONEEYED. adj. [one and eye.] Having
only one eye.
A sign post slumber would disdain to paint
The oney'd heron on his elephant.

The mighty family
Of oney'd brothers hasten to the shore.
ONEIROCRITIC. adj. [ὀνειροκριτικός, Gr.]
oneirocritique, Fr. it should therefore according to analogy be written oneirocritical and oneirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.
It a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which my oneirocritical correspondent has directed him to make.

ONEIROCRITICK. n. f. [ὀνειροκριτικός, Gr.]
An interpreter of dreams.
Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams.

ONENESS. n. f. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.
Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not consisting, as all things do besides God, of many things.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the federal hypothesis, is the one eternal indivisible divine nature, and the eternity of the son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consub-stantiality with the Father when he came down from heaven and was incarnate.

ONERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. onerarius, French.] Fitted for carriage or burdens;
comprising a burden.
To ONERATE. v. a. [onero, Lat.] To load; to burden.

One who condemn'd divine and human laws.

OPERATION. n. f. [from operate.] The act of loading. Ditt.

ONEROUS. adj. [onerous, French; onerofus, Latin.] Burdenfome; oppressive.

A banished person, banished out of necessity, retains all things onerous to himself, as a punishment for his crime. Agoffe.

ONION. n. f. [oignon, Fr. cape, Latin.] A plant.

If the boy have not a woman's gift To rain a shower of commanded tears, An onion will do well. Shakespeare.

I am st. an onion-eyed. Shakespeare.

This is ev'ry cook's opinion, No fav'ry dish without an onion: But lest you kissing should be spoild, Your onions must be thoroughly boild. Swift.

ONLY. adj. [from one, only, or onlike.]

1. Single; one and no more.

Of all whom fortune to my word did bring, This only in me was worth the conquering. Dryden.

2. This and no other.

The only child of that old Saverake Drayton. The logic now in use has long possessed the chair, as the only art taught in the schools for the direction of the mind in the study of the sciences. Leclerc.

3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for mischief.

ONLY. adv.

Simply; singly; merely; barely.

I propose my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.

The policy of the wicked inherit the fruit of their fathers' vices, and that not only by a just judgment, but from the natural course of things. Tillotson.

All who deserve his love, he makes his own; And to be lov'd himself needs only to be known. Dryden.

The practice of virtue is attended not only with present quiet and satisfaction, but with comfortable hope of a future recompence. Nelson.

So must this contention be exercised by us only for good evils, and that not only by a just judgment, but from the natural course of things. Wade.

2. So and no otherwise.

Very imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. Geogin.

3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.

ONOMANCY. n. f. [onoma and manthia.]

Divination by a name.

Defines were superlatively, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were suitable, and that necessities occurred herein with voluntary motion. Caution.

ONOMASTICAL. adj. [onoma and mastris.]

Predicting by names.

Theodatus, when curious to know the success of his wars against the Romans, an onomastical or name-wizard Jew, wiled him to shut up a number of wine and give some of them onomancy, others Gothic names with several marks, and then to leave them. Caution.

ONSET. n. f. [on and set.]

1. Attack; storm; assault; first heat.

As well the soldier dieth, which standeth still, as he that gives the bravest onset. Sidney.

All breathless, weary, faint.

Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd, And kindling new his courage, seeming quiet, Struck him to hugely, that through great content He made him stoop. Spenser.

The shout

Of battle now began, and rushing sound Of onset. Milton.

Sometimes it gains a point, and profusely it finds itself beat and beaten off; yet full again as the onset, attacks the difficulty afresh, plants this reasoning and that argument, like to many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obdurate enclosed truth. South.

Without in it and provisions it is incapable to secure conquests that are made in the firm grasp of an invader. Addison.

Observe

The first impetuous rage of his guest; Use every artifice to keep him heaviest. Philips.

2. Something added or set on by way of ornamental appendage. This sense, says Nicholson, is still retained in Northumberland, where onset means a tuft.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleness; And for an onset, Titus, to advance Thy name and honourable family, Laying will I make my enterprise. Shakespeare.

To ONSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To let upon; to begin. Not used.

This for a while was hotly onsetting and a reasonable price offered, but soon cooled again. Carew.

ONSLAUGHT. n. f. [on and slay. See SLAUGHTER.] Attack; storm; onset.

Not in use.

They made a halt To view the ground, and where t' assault, Then call'd a council, which was best, His siege on onslaught to invest.

The enemy; and 'twas agreed By storm and onslaught to proceed. Hudibras.

ONTOLOGIST. n. f. [from ontology.] One who considers the affections of being in general; a metaphysician.

ONTOLOGY. n. f. [ὄντα and λόγος.] The science of the affections of being in general; metaphysics.

The modes, accidents, and relations that belong to various beings, are copiously treated of in metaphysics, or more properly ontology. Watts.

ONWARD. adv. [onward, Sax.]

1. Forward; progressively.

My lord, When you went onward to this ended action, I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye. Shakespeare.

Staten was now at hand, and from his tent, The monster moving onward, came as fast With horrid strides. Milton.

Him thro' the spicy forest onward come Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat Of his cool bow'r. Milton.

Not one looks backward, onward still he goes, Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his nose. Pope.

2. In a state of advanced progression.

Philoxenus came to see how onward the fruits were of his friend's labour. Sidney.

You are already so far onward of your way, that you have forsaken the imitation of ordinary converse. Dryden.

3. Somewhat further.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand To these dark steps, a little further on. Milton.

ONCHIA. n. f. It is found in two different senses in Scripture.—The odoriferous snail or shell, and the stone onyx. The greatest part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous shell. The onyx is fished for in the Indies, where grows the spicamar, the food of this fish and what makes its shell so aromatic. Caulet.

Take sweet spices, onchida, and galbanum. Isaiah.

ONYX. n. f. [ὄνυξ.] A tempestuous gem, of which there are several species; but the bluish white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx legitima of the ancients. Hud.

Nor are her rare endowments to be sold For glittering sand by Ophi-thorn. Southey.

The blue-eyed saphir, or rich onyx stone. Southey.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agate kind: it is of a dark honey colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white, there happens to be also a reddish or flesh colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonix. Woodward on Jewels.

OOZE. n. f. [either from caux, waters,

Fr. or perp, wetness, Sax.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; slime.

My son t' th' ooze is bedded. Shakespeare.

Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or salt water mud, and found good profit thereby. Carew.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head, Deep in his ore he sought his fledge bed, And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

2. Soft flow; spring. This seems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his first fountain and beginning ooze, Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.

To OOZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by stealth; to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted hubs were cramp'd, even then A wat'ish humour swell'd and ooz'd again. Dryden.

The latent rill, scarce oozing thro' the guls. Thomson.

OOZY. adj. [from ooze.] Mirey; muddy; slimy.

From his oozy bed, Old father Thames advanc'd his rev'rend head. Pope.

To OPACATE. v. a. [opaco, Latin.] To shade; to cloud; to darken; to obscure.

The same copulists upon the untopping of the glass, did opacate that part of the air they moved in. Boyle.

OPACITY. n. f. [opacit, Fr. opacitas, Lat.]

Cloudiness; want of transparency.

Can any thing escape eyes in whole opacity there is no opacity? Bacon.

Had there not been any night, shadow or opacity, we should never have had any determinate colour of darkness. Glanville.

How much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit is it to transmit the species. Keen.

The least parts of almost all bodies, are in some measure transparent; and the opacity of those bodies much from the multitude of reflexions caused in their internal parts. Newton.

OPACOUS. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark;

obscure; not transparent.

When he perceives that opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffusion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more subtle than they, and consequently diaphanous, and having lesser pores, gives itself scope to our eyes to mislead. Dugby.

Upon the hem opacous globe

Of this round world, whose left convex divides The luminous interior orb, melts'd From chaos, and the road of darkness old, Saturn delighted. Milton.

OPAL. n. f. [opalus, Lat.] A very elegant and singular kind of stone; it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opaque, and less hard. It is in the pebble shape, from the head of a pin to the bigness of a walnut. It is naturally bright, and shows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it resembles the finest mother of pearl, it has sometimes a bluish or greenish white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light. Hill.

This stone is a very rare and precious gem, it is composed of many, extended with incrustations, and determined by its own roundness. With opal towers, and flames, it is adorned. Milton.

Of living light, plir.

We have this stone from Germany, and it is the same with the opal of the ancients. Woodward.

OPALINE. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; not transparent; cloudy.

They Shot upward still direct, whence no way round Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton.

These unapparent first stars were actually extinguish'd and turn'd into more opaque and gross planet-like bodies. Chemist.

To OPE. } v. a. [öpen, Sax. op, Islandick; To OPEX. } öpn, Greek; a hole. Ope is used only in poetry, when one syllable is more convenient than two.]

1. To unclose; to unlock; to put into such a state as that the inner parts may be seen or entered: the contrary to shut.

The world's mine eyes,
Which I with sword will open. Shakespeare
Before you light, ope the better. Shakespeare

To ope the gates, and to let in our foe. Farfax
If a man can put, and not cover it, and as a full stream, the owner of the pit shall make it good.

Let us pass through your land, and none shall do you any hurt, howbeit they would not open unto him. Maccabees

The one fits the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry. Locke.

So much as we our lives comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, makes us not one jot the more knowing.

though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opiniatry. Locke.

I can pass by opiniatry, and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing. Woodward's Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatry in leaving me: but he shall not get rid so. Pope.

OPINION. n. f. [opinion, French; opinio, Latin.]

1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben Jonson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees discover and unmask that fallacy of ungrounded persuasions; but confirms the desires and sentiments of nature. Wilkins.

Bless be the princes who have fought for pompous names, or wide dominion,

Since by their error we are taught, That happiness is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion.

Where no such settled custom hath made it law, there it hath force only according to the strength of reason and circumstances joined with it, or as it shews the opinion and judgment of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here? South.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning hens, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir. Locke.

OPIPAROUS. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Sampsonous.

OPITULATION. n. f. [opitulation, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. Dict.

OPIUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind; brought to us in flat cakes or masses very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid.

It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the East-Indies, produced from the white garden poppy, with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green, and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid confluence. The finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. What we generally have is the mere crude juice, worked up with water, or honey sufficient to bring it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing, and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram, but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and dissipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they are going to battle: it afterwards quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on drunkenness, cheerfulness, and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium are apt to be faint, idle, and thoughtless; they lose their appetite, and grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forlook and giv'n me o'er To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milt.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

O'PLE-TREE. n. f. [opulus, ople, and tree.] A sort of tree. Ainsw.

OPOLISALUM. n. f. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPOPONAX. n. f. [Latin.] A gum resin in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taste; brought to us from the East, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. Hill.

O'PIDAN. n. f. [opidanus, Lat.] A townsman; an inhabitant of a town.

TO OPPI'NERATE. v. a. [oppignero, Lat.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in use.

The duke of Guise Henry was the greatest usurer in France, for that he had turned all his estate into obligations; meaning that he had sold and oppignorated all his patrimony, to give large donatives to other men. Bacon.

Ferdinando merchanted with France, for the restoring Roussillon and Perpignan, oppignorated to them. Bacon.
